UNION HEADS PRESENT DEMAND THAT WILSON VETO RAILWAY CONTROL BILL

COMMITTEE OF FIFTEEN PRESENT THE DEMANDS

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25—The railroad unions today asked President Wilson to veto the railroad bill. A delegation of fifteen union leaders called at the White House to leave with Secretary Tumulty, a resolution adopted by railroad unions which have been in session here for several days. They request that he send the bill back to congress without his approval. The spokesman handed Tumulty a memorial urging that Wilson veto the measure.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25—Following conferences that lasted well after mid-night railroad union leaders today were putting the final touches to the memorial urging President Wilson to veto the Cummins-Esch bill under which the nation's railroads will be returned to private ownership Monday. Meanwhile the railroad executives were making last minute preparations for the turning over of their property. There is much speculation as to what course the President will take. Labor leaders have made plans to make the railroad situation an issue at the coming campaign if the President signs the bill. Many leaders have given up hope that the President will veto it. They regard the memorial as a public protest putting labor on record against the bill.

COMMENT OF NEW YORK NEWSPAPERS ON COLBY APPOINTMENT OF WILSON

NEW YORK, Feb. 25—Comment of New York morning newspapers on the appointment of Bainbridge Colby as Secretary of State is as follows:

The Times—The country will assume that the change in the selection involves no change in politics. The President will be his own minister of foreign affairs and Secretary Colby's mind will go along with his. It would be better in his next appointment if Mr. Wilson would offer to satisfy the public rather than surprise the public.

The Sun and Herald declared: The nation is startled by Mr. Wilson's appointment of Bainbridge Colby as secretary of state at this juncture of our crucial international affairs. The Democratic party is shocked and humiliated that among all of the tried and true Democrats of the country there was none to fill this first office in the gift of the President.

The World declared: There could be no more complete triumph of custom and precedent than the selection of Bainbridge Colby to succeed Robert Lansing.

NEW LIBERTY THEATRE TO BE OPENED

Clearfield's Beautiful New Playhouse Will Feature Lew Cody Tomorrow All Day

HOUSE LAST WORD IN COMFORT

Manager Fred Thompson's New Liberty Theatre, one of the neatest, most finely appointed and very best ventilated picture shows in this section of the state, will be opened to the public for the first time on Friday, February 27th (tomorrow) afternoon and evening.

Mr. Thompson purchased the old Windsor Hotel property from James Mahaffey early last summer and immediately after getting possession of same started a crew of workmen in to remodel and convert it into an uptodate picture show or movie theatre. Under the direction of Architect and Contractor Frank Snoke he has succeeded even beyond his fondest expectations, and we feel safe in saying that all of Clearfield will marvel at the magnificence, arrangement, equipment, comfort and general attractiveness of the new theatre.

The outstanding feature predominant is comfort and convenience of patrons, with box office returns a secondary consideration, because the former feature always controls or compels the latter. With that iden in mind Mr. Thompson overlooked nothing to be reasonably expected in a first class theatre—even to the supplying of a handsome French plate glass mirror in the lobby where milady can properly realign her millinery and give hat and hair that deft, magic or necessary feminine touch before going out onto the street at the conclusion of a picture.

The theatre proper is 43x87 feet in size, with a height of 22 feet. The main entrance is on Market street, the outside doors opening into an exceptionally handsome lobby 18x26 feet in size and 12 feet high. The screen equipment is of the latest style non-flicker Gold Fibre and is 12x16 feet in size. Two late style Bauer Big 6 picture machines are installed.

The theatre has a seating capacity of a little more than 600 and is equipped with 19 and 20 inch. roomy and comfortable American seats, acknowledged to be the best on the market. There is comfort and convenience in every line of the seats and they are so placed as to afford ample room in getting in or out.

The floors are of selected maple flooring, while handsomely frescoed steel ceilings add greatly to the beauty of both lobby and auditorium. The walls are double solid brick construction and the building is comfortably heated with steam heat from its own plant.

The auditorium is equipped with four double 6x7 foot exit doors, two on either side, while two 5x7 foot emergency exits adjoin the main entrance from the lobby. These safety exits extend completely around the building and make it possible to empty the big auditorium in case the emergency arises in a few seconds of time.

Another feature and one which eclipses all theatres generally and all others in this section is the ventilating scheme and the lighting. A 6x6 foot ceiling ventilator is installed over the middle of the theatre, while three large windows on either side allow the supplying of copious currents of fresh, pure air throughout the entire room after each afternoon or evening performance and should serve to make The Liberty Theatre the healthiest assembly room in the town

The lighting scheme, which was evolved by Mr Thompson, long a lighting and electrical expert, is perfect and leaves nothing to be desired in this direction The picture machines are installed in an 8x9x7 foot asbestos booth and there is absolutely no danger of accident in the theatre even though trouble be had with the film rolls, which sometimes occurs in picture shows.

The Liberty Theatre sure is a fine place and need but be seen to be appreciated It opens tomorrow with Lew Cody in "The Beloved Cheater" Manager Thompson in order to give the little folks a chance to look the place over will give a free matinee to the children from 1 to 6 o'clock.

FEDERAL AGENTS CLASH ON DRY ENFORCEMENT

Major Dalrymple Pours Eight Barrels Of Homemade Wine Into Gutters of Streets

MET NO ARMED RESISTANCE

IRON RIVER, MICH., Feb. 25—Major A. B. Dalrymple and his federal prohibition law enforcement squad left Iron River tonight for Chicago. The met with no open resistance and the "whiskey rebellion" was regarded as ended, although a searching investigation has been promised by Washington.

A warrant that had been issued for the arrest of Major Dalrymple was not served and the major failed to carry out his threats to arrest District Attorney McDonough for interference with federal officers.

Eight barrels of wine, which had been seized by L. G. Grove, the local federal prohibition officer and which had been recovered by State Attorney McDonough, was poured into the streets by Major Dalrymple. There was no demonstration. It was the seizure of this wine that started the "rebellion." The district attorney had charged the federal authorities had seized it without due process of law.

The meeting between Major Dalrymple and State Attorney McDonough amounted to nothing more than an exchange of sarcasm. Major Dalrymple went to the office of McDonough to explain the purpose of the federal agents in coming to Iron River, but McDonough was not there. In the afternoon McDonogh decided to visit the major at Iron Inn, where he was stopping.

Someone told Major Dalrymple that McDonough was looking for him, and accompanied by four agents the major came out of the dining room. Mr. McDonough walked over to Major Dalrymple.

"My name is McDonough," he said.

Major Dalrymmple looked at him undecidedly, and then said "I'm glad to meet you."

"I have come here, Mr. Dalrymple," said the state attorney, "to issue a warning to you. I want you to heed it. What I want to tell you is this, that if you or your men attempt to arrest me or my aids without due process of law, I will arrest you and your men and lock you up. Furthermore, if you or your men attempt to enter the private homes of citizens here without due process of law, we will likewise arrest you at once. My purpose is to put you where you belong, Mr. Dalrymple."

"Mr. McDonough, this seems entirely unnecessary," said the major. "I have come here or the purpose of enforcing the law. It is not necessary that you come to me. I went to your office this morning"

"I was not at my office this morning when you called," replied McDonough. "I have the responsibility in this matter and merely came here to warn you of the situation in which you are."

Major Dalrymple stammered, "I think this is a high-handed grandstand play."

"You are a natural grand-stand player yourself," returned McDonough "You started something and will see it through, Mr. Dalrymple. You have my position in the matter clearly in your mind, I hope, and I have no more to say."

Major Dalrymple just before this encounter with McDonough received a telegram from John F. Kramer, federal director of prohibition, stating that United States District Attorney Myron Walker, of Grand Rapids, would come to Iron River for a conference before definite action would be taken It was also learned thru press dispatches that H. B. Maylord, chief aid of Director Kramer, is on his way from Washington to investigate the entire situation.

CONGRESSMAN JONES SEEKS RE-ELECTION

Representative Of Twenty-First District Deserves Support Of The Voters

HAS MADE EXCELLENT RECORD

Our congressman, Evan J. Jones, of McKean county, today announces that he will be a candidate for a second term and there are various and sundry reasons why Congressman Jones should be given the nomination and the office at the general election. In Congressman Jones, the district has had a real representative in the lower house of our national lawmaking body and one who has got a lot of pleasure out of performing his duty as a congressman. For the first time in years the door of our congressman's office has been wide open and everyone having business to transact could "walk right in" and get a hearing. Congressman Jones has not done any great big spectacular stunts, he has not landed any great percentage of our citizenry in the seats of the high and mighty and he has not come back to us with any great big pork barrels. What he has done is greater than all of these. He has kept his Washington office open to all comers and given his personal attention to the mountains of mail which arrived from the people in the four counties of his district. No letter has gone unanswered. No accommodation was too insignificant or too great to miss his attention.

Always On The Job

It is said of Jones that he is so punctual in his attendance at the sessions that the clerk never calls his name at roll call. Since the beginning of his term there have been only a few isolated instances in which he has been marked as an absentee and in these cases he was forced by necessity to be absent. He has been in Washington almost continuously since he assumed office and has taken an active part in all the vital problems that have been up for consideration.

His Work for Service Men

Inquiry at his office develops the interesting fact that he has performed a definite and far reaching service for two thousand different service men in looking after the many claims and adjustments growing out of their discharge. Many of these cases have been called to the attention of readers of The Progress from time to time. This work comprised claims and information of every conceivable form and many of the cases called for the most diligent and painstaking efforts on the part of Mr. Jones. Perhaps the most valuable assistance he has rendered the service men has been in connection with the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. He has kept in close personal touch with this department and as a result thereof and his prompt attention to this matter there are indeed few claims in this district which have not been adjusted.

Excellent Record

As a congressman and aside from these little accommodations which go to make an efficient public official, Mr. Jones has a record in congress of which any first termer can be justly proud. In brief it is as follows:

On the formation of the committees at the beginning of the first session of the 66th Congress, he was placed on one of the major committees—the Committee on Agriculture.

Later, at the beginning of the second session, by reason of the resignation of Hon. J. Hampton Moore, who was elected Mayor of Philadelphia, a vacancy was created on the Committee on Inter-State and Foreign Commerce. By the unanimous request of the Pennsylvania Republican Delegation, Congressman Jones was nominated and elected to fill this vacancy. This is one of the most important committees in congress and it is very seldom that a new member has been placed on it.

There are about eighty committees in congress, about eight of which are considered major committees. A member of a major committee cannot be a amember of any other committee at the same time, by a Rule of the House. Mr. Jones has already been a member of two of these major committees. His election to the Inter-State and Foreign Commerce Committee may be viewed in the light of a distinct promotion.

As a member of the Agricultural Committee, Mr. Jones was active in all the legislation before that committee. He was on the sub-committee that drafted the Cold Storage Bill, and had much to do with the construction of the Cold Storage Law. He also took a very active part in the hearings on the appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture.

He has been delegated by the Penna. Delegation to make a special study of pending legislation, in order that he may report on such measures to that delegation, giving his views and conclusions for their information and guidance. His adverse report on the Mondell Bill has been read by the members, not only from Pennsylvania, but also from other states, and had much to do with the change in sentiment on this piece of legislation.

Has Redeemed Pledges

According to party rules and practice a second term will be conceded to Mr. Jones but this will not be his biggest asset in coming before the voters. In ever yvillage and community he will find people whom he has befriended and assisted in the many problems which the average citizen has had with his government, particularly those of military ops. Letters addressed to him have received prompt attention and everything in the power of a congressman has been done to give assistance. When Mr. Jones was a candidate four years ago he called at The Progress office and stated his platform. He stated plainly that he would go to Congress as he would consider it a great honor to represent this district, and if elected he would spend his time in Washington, keep an office open there for the quick dispatch of business and the consideration of his constituents and work everlastingly for the advancement of the interests of the district. Mr. Jones has fulfilled his pledge to us. He has been a real representative of this district, mingling with people badly and will need during the next two years. Mr. Jones deserves the support of every citizen who believes in rewarding a faithful servant and a devoted worker.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TAKES NOTE OF NEW JERSEY LIQUOR LEGISLATION

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25—Federal prohibition officials today were studying the situation in New Jersey where the lower House of Legislature passed a bill legalizing the sale of beer containing 3½ per cent. alcohol which is contrary to the Volstead act. Federal Prohibition Commission John S. Kramer would not discuss the situation declaring that the New Jersey upper House must pass the bill and Governor Edwards must sign it before it becomes a law. It was emphasized that the federal law will be enforced and arrests will follow the first sale of 3½ per cent. beer in New Jersey.

ARTICLE TEN AND LEAGUE COVENANT WILL BE LAST TO BE DISPOSED

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25—The Senate today adopted a motion by Senator Lodge to postpone discussion of reservations on Artilce Ten and the League of Nations covenant until all other reservations have been disposed of. Senator Knox asked the purpose of it and Lodge replied "everybody knows that this is the chief question in the controversy and it will save time if we dispose of the other reservations first."Hitchcock, Democratic leader, cast the only vote against Lodge's move.

$128,000 WAGE LOSS DUE TO STRIKES IN CLEARFIELD COUNTY

HARRISBURG, Feb. 25—Striking coal industrial workers in Clearfield county $128,000 during the last year, according to a report issued by Edward B. Connelly, commissioner of the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry. It is estimated that approximately 32,000 working days were lost through the labor disputes. The state's bureau of conciliation and arbitration was notified of 3 strikes in that county during 1919.

Fourteen millions of dollars is the estimated cost of the 456 strikes that occurred in Pennsylvania last year. The workmen lost approximately 500,000 working days while the disputes were on. There were 172,000 employes involved in the strikes.

Textile workers displayed the greatest amount of unrest, for 146 strikes occurred in that industry. The metal trades had 78 disputes, and the building trades reported 54 strikes.

ENGLISH AS SHE WILL BE

That the slang and idioms of today will be correct English tomorrow is the opinion of Prof. H. Glicksman of the English department, University of Wisconsin.

"Our language is made up of what was once slang, idiom, colloquialism and jargon," he said, and warned that the only deplorable feature about slang was its tendency to produce mental slovenliness.

Prof. Glicksman then referred to the word "mob" as slang of 200 years ago and denounced in The Spectator by Addison.

"It is an abbreviation of the word 'mobile.' Even so the word 'pep' is vital and virile and will survive with the world 'snappy.' But to gain recognition slang must be free from vulgarity and cheapness," said Glicksman.

"The term 'How do you get that way?' is condemned because it is meaningless but the term 'he has pull' is approved as it is the opposite of 'push' a word that has forged ahead through its own strength."

OLD PARTIES THROUGH WITH JOHN B.

Those who still hang on to the hope that at one convention or the other John Barleycorn will be given one more chance for his life might just as well begin casting about for another straw to cling to. No such hope is held out.

The carefully-noted attitude of officials at party headquarters, coupled with a soewhat exhaustive inquiry among party leaders and party followers reveals absolutely nothing resembling a serious intention on the part of either Republicans or Democrats of broaching the subject of "booze" at Chicago or San Francisco.

A study of the question failed to show that the alleged demand for drink had caused even a ripple at either of the National party headquarters.

The attitude of the old parties seems to be that the subject is loaded with a combination of dynamite and asphyxiating gas, and few politicians will willingly discuss it without first "shushing" and locking the door.

PASTOR AND WIFE HONORED

Rev. and Mrs. John M. Waddell, of Bellevue, were honor guests last night at an informal farewell reception given them by the members of the congregation of the Bellevue Presbyterian church, of which Rev. Waddell has been pastor for years. Sharing honors with Rev. and Mrs. Waddell, was Mrs. S. B. Storer, mother of Mrs. Waddell, who will leave with the family March 1st, for Blairstown, N. J., where Rev. Waddell has accepted a position in the Blairstown Academy. The men of the congregation, as a parting gift, presented Rev. Waddell with a well-filled purse and a gold watch and guard, and Mrs. Waddell was presented with a gold wrist watch, a gift from the women of the congregation, and Mrs. Storer was presented with a pin. A luncheon was served in the church dining room later in the evening.—Pittsburg Post Today.

PROBLEMS FACING STRICKEN WORLD

Shall Chaos or Reconstruction in Europe Follow the Great World War?

RADICALISM IN THE SADDLE

Without a Definite Program, People Everywhere Are Demanding a Change in Present Conditions—Threat of "Direct Action."

Article XI.

By FRANK COMERFORD.

Radicalism in Europe is rampant. The workers are active, the middle class sympathetic. The industrial centers are hotbeds. The conservatism of the farmers and peasants is breaking down. It is hard to define this radicalism—it is without form. It isn't a definite program, it isn't even political. The people are dissatisfied. The red flag is popular. It promises a short cut. It answers the cry of the impatient. I was surprised to see many of the very men who fought so gallantly under their country's flag and who but yesterday would have torn the red flag from the flagpole, now defending it, carrying it and following it. I am sure they do not know what the red flag stands for. To them it represents a protest against things as they are. Summed up in a word, the attitude of mind of the workers of Europe is eagerness for a change—some change—any change. Every one knows the symptoms, understands what is wrong, but the remedy is only vaguely discussed.

I attach much significance to the new attitude of organized labor in Europe. Labor unions formerly concerned themselves with wages, terms of employment, shop conditions, safety appliances, recognition of their right of collective bargaining. Since the war the labor movement has taken up questions entirely outside of its field, questions properly the concern of all the people, questions of government policy. I have in mind recent demands made by the working men in England, France and Italy. These demands were addressed to the regularly and properly elected representatives of the people, the governments. They were accompanied by threats of general strikes if they were not acceded to. This step is an innovation; it is revolutionary.

The working men are citizens and have a voice in the government equal with all other citizens. After the people have selected their representatives, the men chosen should be responsible to all of the people without regard to class or station. A government by one portion of the people is autocratic. Government of the people, for the people, and by the people, means all of the people. The effort on the part of a minority in the labor movement, who challengingly call themselves socialists, to dictate to the state, representing all of the people, is an attack upon democracy. If successful it would destroy the state and leave the great majority of the people, including the workers, less free than they are now. What sane man, whether he is a working man or not, is in favor of minority government?

Demands Hard to Understand.

I witnessed many demonstrations in Europe under the red flag, in which the leaders demanded three things from the government.

First, they demanded the release of all the men in jail who were held for political crimes. These included men found guilty of sedition and treason during the war. I cannot understand this demand. Why should men be released from jail who sought to stab in the back the men who went to the trenches to fight and die for freedom? I should much prefer to see all of the burglars released. If I am compelled to choose between the traitor and the burglar, I will have no trouble in making my decision.

Second, they demanded that no soldiers be sent to Russia. The agitation on this point was so strong that when the British government attempted to send soldiers to Russia last summer (1919), the soldiers mutinied, and so far as I am able to learn the feeling was so strong, the situation so critical, the government did not dare court-martial them.

Third, they demanded that all conscription laws be abolished.

It is apparent that these demands, coming from a minority, backed by a threat, constitute an invasion of the rights of the people. The question isn't whether or not one believes these things should be done; the issue is the method resorted to. Personally I do not believe soldiers should be sent to Russia. In my opinion allied intermeddling has been stupid and harmful, but if these matters of general public policy are to be decided, all of the people should have a vote in making up the verdict.

When you consider this new attitude of labor in conjunction with the growing popularity of "direct action," it indicates that the labor movement is losing faith in law and political action. I am not saying that their experience with politics, their betrayal by men they have supported, the default of political parties to carry out pre-election pledges, may not be responsible for a distrust in political government. I am not denying that capital has had the ear of government more than it should; that property has been given more thought than human beings. I am concerned with the danger that these innovations promise, a danger to the working men themselves, a menace to law and order, without which no one is secure, without which there can be no freedom.

Political Action Called Failure.

I heard a speech in London that deeply impressed me. It was applauded by several thousand men and women—average good British working people. Most of the men wore service badges. The speaker, a clean young Englishman of about thirty-five, said:

"Political action is a failure. We vote and we are betrayed. Political parties are the agents of hands of capital. Their purpose is to keep the workers apart, knowing that divided we are powerless. The only time they are willing we should unite is when war calls for men. What did we win in the war? Nothing. We thought we had a stake in the game, that the hand we were playing was our own. Now that it is over we have discovered that we won nothing.

"What did the working man ever get by voting, except the worst of it? The word vote comes from a Latin word, meaning 'to wish.' Who ever got anything by wishing?

"We are like the story in Bellamy's 'Looking Backward.' You remember he spoke of a coach. On top of this coach the capitalists sit in the sunshine enjoying the ride. On the side of the coach, hanging by their fingernails and toenails are the hundreds of thousands who make up the middle class. Millions of men are pulling the coach. They are sweating and trudging—they are the working men. Running along the side of the coach are millions more, fighting to get a chance to get hold of the rope and pull the coach. They are the idle. There is only one thing to do. That is to stop pulling the coach, let go of the rope. Don't wish about it; do it. The fellows on the top of the coach don't do any wishing—they hoss and drive."

The crowd cheered. There is some truth in the speech. It is true that the working man has not had a square deal; but the fact that he has not had fair treatment does not make the plan of direct action a sane, wise plan. Revolution would only lead to blood and disorder and leave the very men who revolted in a worse plight than they are now. The millions who are the majority have an infinitely better weapon than force. They have the ballot. They are in the majority. Men must think their way out of the wilderness. They cannot fight their way out. When they try to they go deeper in.

Bolshevism Finding Favor.

I found the word bolshevism in the minds and on the lips of the working people of Europe. I expected to find them antibolshevik if for no other reason than that bolshevism came from Russia and the bolsheviki made peace with Germany while the allies were in a death struggle with her with the result in doubt. I found them confessing their faith in bolshevism, speaking of it as a new religion, resenting the obstacles their own governments had placed in its way.

In Ireland, the last place I expected to find a leaning toward bolshevism, I found an open devotion to it. The Irish people are in many respects the most conservative in the world. The only radicalism they have ever shown is the revolutionary spirit expressed in uprisings for freedom. The Irish are a people of reminiscence and tradition. The Celtic mind is devoted to form and custom. I was present at the Irish Federation of Labor convention held in August, 1919, at Drogheda. The delegates to this convention, representing 300,000 union men and women, went on record almost unanimously for bolshevism. I later learned that few of them, if any, knew exactly what bolshevism was. I asked a leading spirit of the convention if he believed in communism, the abolition of the private ownership of property, and he said, "Of course not; that's rank nonsense; socialism; impossible and impractical." The pro and con of bolshevism has from the beginning been partisan and prejudiced. Working men are bolsheviks because employers are against it, and employers are against it because the men are for it.

Duty Before the World.

Millions of gallant young men have fought for the new world. Hundreds of thousands died to establish it. If we fail to honor the promise given to them we dishonor ourselves. What does a new world mean? What was the old world like? It was a world where toil for myriads of honest workers, men and women, purchased nothing better than squalor, penury, anxiety and wretchedness—a world scarred by slums and disgraced by sweating, where unemployment through the vicissitudes of industry brought despair to multitudes of humble homes; a world where, side by side with want, there was waste of the inexhaustible riches of the earth, partly through ignorance and want of forethought, partly through entrenched selfishness. If we relieve the lease of that world we shall betray the heroic dead. We shall be guilty of the basest perfidy that ever blackened a people's fame.—David Lloyd George.

Golden Pheasant Feathers.

A considerable source of profit exists in the feathers of the golden pheasant, which are used in salmon fishing. These birds, which are natives of China, are the hardiest of the pheasant tribe, and are not at all troublesome to rear in this country.

"I Want Two Copies"

Said a farmer to me the other day: "I get one now, but if my wife or my daughter or my son happens to meet the mailman I have to fight to get a look at it. Put me down for another subscription for so I can have a copy all to myself." That, said I to myself, is an idea worth passing on. It won't break any farmer these days to buy $2.00 worth of the Great National Farm Weekly—and if it will make peace in his family—say, come on. Line forms on the left!

You don't hesitate to buy two postage stamps so you and your wife can both write letters; or two newspapers so you can both read. Two copies a week of THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN cost even less. The Governor of one state bought three subscriptions for his farm and two more for his office in the state capitol the other day. . . .

Of course I'm not arguing for two or three or five subscriptions until you have one. But the one is of vital importance to you, as well as to the wife and the boys. Besides giving weekly entertainment for the whole family, a single idea in one of the 52 big issues may save you $1.00. Buy one subscription for only one dollar today!

Hot Water Each Morning Puts Roses in Your Cheeks

To look one's best and feel one's best is to enjoy an inside bath each morning to flush from the system the previous day's waste, sour fermentations and poisonous toxins before it is absorbed into the blood. Just as coal, when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ashes, so the food and drink taken each day leave in the alimentary organs a certain amount of indigestible material, which if not eliminated, forms toxins and poisons which are then sucked into the blood through the very ducts which are intended to suck in only nourishment to sustain the body.

If you want to see the glow of healthy bloom in your cheeks, to see your skin get clearer and clearer, you are told to drink every morning upon arising, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless means of washing the waste material and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary tract, before putting more food into the stomach.

Girls and women with sallow skins, liver spots, pimples or pallid complexion, also those who wake up with a coated tongue, bad taste, nasty breath, others who are bothered with headaches, bilious spells, acid stomach or constipation should begin this phosphated hot water drinking and are assured of very pronounced results in one or two weeks.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs very little at the drug store but is sufficient to demonstrate that just as soap and hot water cleanses, purifies and freshens the skin on the outside, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the inside organs. We must always consider that internal sanitation is vastly more important than outside cleanliness, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do.

Women who desire to enhance the beauty of their complexion should just try this for a week and notice results.

DON'T NEGLECT THE LITTLE ONES

A snuffling, sneezing, coughing child certainly is a reflection upon the parents. To permit a child to suffer from a cold is more than negligence; it is cruel. A cold that hangs on weakens the system and can easily turn into something serious. Mrs. J. S. Pitson, 376 E. 158 St., Cleveland, Ohio, writes: "I can't speak too highly of Foley's Honey and Tar. When my little girl has a cold I give her Foley's Honey and Tar and that stops her coughing ain a little while." Children like it. It contains no opiates.

THE NEXT WAR

Gas In Next War

This is the second of a series of statements by eminent French scientists, inventors and military leaders on the subject of the next war and the fate of the people in the face of development by science of the use of new weapons for killing.

By GENERAL DEBENEY
(Director of French College of War)

"Should war begin again now, aviation and especially gas, would play one of the most important parts. The progress of aviation would make the rear of each front, and very far in, extremely dangerous, and the progress of chemistry would permit to use gas on zones of such an extent that it cannot be imagined.

"But this would be the sense in which the war would develop, much more than the immediate effect that would take place from the beginning of hostilities.

"Making gas is naturally rapidly done, because all the manufacturers of chemical products—still so numerous in Germany—can be requisitioned; but to make airplanes is much slower.

"Thus, while there will be people at work to prepare ways of attacking it is evident that others will be preparing ways of protecting themselves and that means once again the race between the novice agents and the defence against those agents.

"The defence against gas seems to be more difficult than against airplanes. I believe that, against airplanes, the anti aircraft artillery is susceptible of making rapid progress, and perhaps, in that very instance gas wil be one of the best ways if with appropriate shells the air can be poisoned all around the attacking airplane. It would be so much more effective to create, for example, a sphere of poisoned air a mile around the airplane, instead of trying to hit the machine directly with bits of the shell.

"Concerning the defense against gas, I expect that our chemists will find some 'anti gas' neutralizing other gas. But until further order, I am afraid more of gas than airplanes, and this. because there are no products which can be so easily made in secret.

"We will be able to control the cannon and ammunition works in Germany, but it will be the worst job to watch the manufacture of chemical products. A laboratory secret, a procedure carefully kept secret, and these manufactures become tomorrow war toxic products makers. This is the main danger.

"As regards strategy, it could not be munch modified, as long as we have not improved our transportation system. We can expect airplanes to carry hundreds of men, but not yet whole divisions. It may take place some day, but we have not arrived there.'

Next War at Sea

This is the third of a series of discussions by prominent scientific, naval, and military experts on the subject of the next war. Commandant X, a high authority of the French navy, whose name naval usage does not permit to be used, suggests that submarines may one day become in fact warships.

By COMMANDANT X
(High Authority of French Navy)

"What would be a new war, from the naval point of view, depends on the enemy and the kind of war that would have to be fought. For the time being, the French navy and all the world navies are waiting, and that is about all.

"But a large development of the submarine warfare may be expected. Submarines might become real warships. During the last war, except at the end, and in exceptional cases, submarines employed dodginess exclusively. They used to hide and flee as soon as they were discovered. They never accepted fight, even patrol boats or cargo boats.

"In the future, nothing prevents the building of submarines which will be armed sufficiently and equipped to fight naval units such as torpedo boats.

"It is likely that the decpest transformation of future war would be the most intense use of submarines and water planes. We will witness one day or the other a new evolution of sea aviation.

"The field open to submarines and water planes is indefinite. Their importance will increase. One might see during the future war lively fights between submarines, or against ships or airplanes.

"Nothing opposes either to the development of using boats directed from away with electric cables, like the Germans employed on the Belgian coast to attack British monitors.

"Regarding the artillery, a formidable increase of the range, and a real 'race to the caliber' must be forecasted. To destroy enormous ships, enormous shells will be necessary. The shell of 450 millimeters will become a minimum for the big guns.

"Concerning the changes in tactics, the greatest circumspection rules now. The High School of the navy has just been formed, and it has not been stated yet whether there will be a course of tactics.

"The suggestions for the naval budget are very timid, very modest, but it is probable that the parliament will still make it less, on account of the high price of building. The idea is to act in such a way that the French navy does not disappear and keeps sufficient elements to develop itself spontaneously, if necessary.

"The naval power of a country does not only depend on the value of its material, but also and above all on its staff. In France, soldiers can be improvised, thanks to the characteristic qualities of the race; but even in France, and nowhere sailors can be made so. The maritime traditions must be kept intact with the help of well formed chiefs, and this is what will be done.

TURN HAIR DARK WITH SAGE TEA

Grandma kept her locks dark, glossy and youthful with a simple mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grand mother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive.

The MAN NOBODY KNEW

by HOLWORTHY HALL

COPYRIGHT BY BROADHEAD & CO., INC.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—In a base hospital at Rouilly, France, his face disfigured beyond recognition, an American soldier serving in the French army attracts attention by his deep despondency. Asked by the surgeons for a photograph to guide them in making over his face, he offers in derision a picture of the Saylor, bidding them take that as a model. They do so, making a remarkable likeness.

CHAPTER II.—Invalided home, on the boat he meets Martin Harmon, New York banker, who is attracted by his remarkable features. The ex-soldier gives his name as "Henry Hilliard," and his home as Syracuse, New York. He left there under a cloud, and is embittered against his former fellow townsmen. Harmon makes him a proposition to sell mining stocks in Syracuse, concealing his identity. He accepts it, seeing in it a chance to make good and prove he has been undiscriminated.

CHAPTER III.—In Syracuse "Hilliard" (in reality Richard Morgan) is accepted as a stranger. He visits James Cullen, a former employer, relating a story of the death of Richard Morgan, and is surprised at the regret shown by Cullen and his youthful daughter Angela. While at the Cullen home Carol Durant, Morgan's former fiancee, makes a call.

CHAPTER IV.—Hilliard repeats to Carol his story of Morgan's death and is deeply moved by the evidence of her deep feeling for the supposed dead man. He resolves, however, to continue the deception.

CHAPTER V.—Next day Hilliard gathers from Angela that Carol had always loved Dick Morgan, and while delivering to her a letter supposedly from her former fiancee realizes that his affection is unchanged. His welcome by Doctor Durant, Carol's father, also shakes his resolution to continue the deception, but he supposes it.

CHAPTER VI.—In Syracuse Hilliard is looked upon as a capitalist and mining expert, and in that capacity, in pursuance of his object, interests Cullen in the possibility of wealth in mining properties. The Cullens and Hilliard go to the Durant home for dinner.

CHAPTER VII.

Since Friday night, Hilliard had lived only for Sunday; his whole existence had been turned to Sunday, and when at last the morning dawned, his greatest fear was that he might not live until dinner-time.

On reaching Carol's side, he was both awkward and incoherent; and he failed to derive encouragement from the realization which gradually stole over him, that the Durants had asked a number of other guests to dinner. Armstrong was waiting patiently in the aisle, and keeping closer to Carol than Hilliard liked, and there was also a bright-faced boy of nineteen or twenty who had promptly attached himself to Angela—his name was Waring, and he was the grandson of the patriarchal clergyman, with the head of Moses and the spirit of youth, who presently came down to join the little group, and complete it. So that altogether there were nine people who finally sat down to table; and Hilliard's dream of quiet progress and harbored conversation was shattered in a twinkling.

It was all very homelike, and all very friendly, but to Hilliard, sitting there between Carol and her mother, the occasion was peculiarly acute. He had long since discarded any residue of his active fears; he was confident in his disguise to the point of recklessness, for he had covered the windings of the trail by an infinite variety of methods; and yet without having any tangible facts to grasp, he was subtly warned to remain on sentry duty over his poise.

He was gratified that the conversation, after one natural enough eddy, was whirled away from the vicissitudes of Dicky Morgan, for he had talked his fill on that particular subject. For a time, he amused himself by watching Angela and Waring playing their world-old game across the table; after that, he paid a little polite attention to Mrs. Durant, and to the clergyman; and then snatching an opportunity unlooked for, he gave his kindest smile to Carol, and for an instant took the monopoly from Armstrong. And he had hardly looked down once into her October-brown eyes before the mystery of his restlessness was as clear as crystal, and Hilliard was thoroughly dumfounded, and confused

It had come upon him, a quarter of an hour ago, as they exchanged their first superficial sentences, that he was lonelier than he had ever imagined, but he hadn't realized, until this immediate contingency, that this sensation had carried over until now. He was prevented, by the very limits of the project which had brought him here, from releasing any of his sincere thoughts; he hadn't comprehended, until he had learned the truth just now by actual experience, that loneliness is nothing but an aggravated state of self-repression. Never in all his life, not even when he had lain for months in hospital in France, had he been as lonely as today, and at this moment, when he was surrounded by people he knew intimately, and when he was enjoined from sharing in their community of mind.

Carol, looking up at him with what wasn't exactly a smile, but was at least a cousin to it—that well remembered flash of sympathetic interest—Carol spoke to him under cover of the general conversation.

"A penny for your thoughts!" she proffered.

"They aren't worth it," said Hilliard. "I was thinking about myself." He continued to regard her steadily, and he was alarmed to discover that he was losing one of the abilities which had made him so sure of himself. He continued to hold that she had treated him shabbily, mercilessly; but notwithstanding that, as he gazed at her, and perceived the sweet naturalness which was developing out of last week's shock, he was secretly perturbed. In spite of himself, he began to see, as though by camera obscura, dim visions of the past; he was righteously annoyed that they should rise to torment him, and still the visions came.

"But after all that you've been through," she said, "I should think your thoughts about yourself would be extremely interesting!"

"I'm afraid they're rather gloomy, Miss Durant, whenever they touch on what I've been through. And when anything like this gathering here today builds up a comparison. . . . I'm sorry, but I can't always master it."

"You mean the difference between a family over here and a family over there?"

"Exactly," he said. "Down to the last detail—what we eat, and where we live, and what we talk about, and what we think about—everything."

"I've thought of that, too," she said soberly. "But I'll have to confess that it wasn't until you came—it wasn't until after that first night at Angela's—that the great difference came home to me. It's made me feel that it's almost wrong—almost unendurable—that we should be so warm and comfortable, and well fed, when over on the continent . . . well, I wonder whether we won't have to pay for this some time?"

It was at this juncture that Mrs. Durant rose, and Hilliard, with keen foresight, cannily guided Carol after her mother into the living room made for a familiar piece of furniture and preempted it; it could seat two people, and no more—there was not the slightest use in Armstrong's loitering disconsolately in the neighborhood of it had a maximum capacity of two. Furthermore, it was removed by several feet from the nearest listening post.

He was so close to her that their sleeves touched; he looked into the beautiful eyes which were so clear, so unsuspecting; and his will swayed perilously. Had he prepared so long and savagely for his requital, only to lose his impetus at almost the first glance of those brown eyes? He reflected that there was nothing to prevent him from being a good salesman, and from renewing his predilection for Carol at the same time. The idea of courting her again, in his false character, was highly dramatic. . . .

"I know you won't misunderstand me," he said, his heart shaking, "and I hope that you won't consider it as too presumptuous—but—the other day you spoke of Dicky Morgan as a very dear friend of yours. Miss Durant, I want to do everything in the world I can for you, and he was my dear friend as well as yours. I'm not disloyal to him, or to you, or to myself—but I should like more than I can ever tell you to feel that I had done my utmost to take his place. No one can do that literally—I am not so vain—but I feel, and I have felt from the time we met each other, Dicky would have wanted us to be friends."

He Was So Close to Her That Their Sleeves Touched.

"That's—that's wonderfully thoughtful of you," said Carol softly. "And . . . and I think he would have wanted that . . . if he'd known. . . ." Her eyes were suspiciously dim and Hilliard's loneliness dissolved into a great spasm of longing which held him and shook him and left him weak with impotence.

"Then I'll stay in Syracuse," he said abruptly. "Provided—provided you won't be offended if I do have to want to know you for yourself—just a little selfishly. I'm afraid that isn't very clear—it's difficult to separate it—but you see—"

"Don't try to explain," she said, subdued. "I know how hard all this must be for you—and I think perhaps you need my friendship as much as I need yours."

Before he could reply, there was a flutter of indescribable gracefulness before them. Angela was courtesying in mock obeisance to the floor. Behind her, Waring was watching her possessively.

"If your majesties will wake up half a second," she said, "everybody's going to walk up around the Sedgwick farm tract to get some fresh air. Coming?"

As they stood together, drenched with regret for the confidences that might forever remain unsaid, a maid appeared in the doorway.

"Please, ma'am," she said breathlessly, "it's the Western Union—for Mr. Hilliard."

"Right in my study," called the doctor, hurrying. "Just across the hall. There you are!" and ushered him into the sanctum and considerately closed the door.

Despite the urgent summons which the average person feels under such circumstances Hilliard was astonishingly tardy in sitting down to the receiver. For one thing he was still vibrating from his recent stress of passion; for another he knew pretty certainly what the message was going to be, and for a third, he was somewhat emotionally under the spell of the doctor's room. Hilliard had spent a hundred hours in it—pleasant hours, so that involuntarily yielding to its kindly atmosphere, and all that the atmosphere implied, he took time to survey all four walls before he took up the receiver. And after he had listened to the telegram, and ordered a copy mailed to him in care of Mr. Cullen, he took time to survey those walls again, more closely; and this was partly for their intrinsic significance, and partly because his feelings were so fresh and tender that he dreaded to return at once to the gathering which, as a whole, couldn't be expected to defer to them. His eyes fell upon the doctor's desk, wandered and suddenly focussed hard and piercingly. He went over to the desk and slowly put out his hand and lifted up a small photograph in a metal frame.

"Well, I'll be darned!" said Hilliard, just above a whisper. The turning of the doorknob roused him; he wheeled with the photograph still in his hand.

"Hello!" said Doctor Durant, cheerfully. "Get your message all right? What's that you've found? Oh, yes—Dick's picture."

Hilliard swallowed hard, and found that his voice was queerly out of control.

"It's—it's the same one—"

"Yes—it's the same as the one you brought back. I've had it there ever since he gave it to me."

He took it gently from Hilliard's hand; replaced it on the desk. "How that boy would have made good if he

dertone. "Well—they're waiting for us."

Hilliard, following him outside, encountered the two Cullens in the hall, and at sight of his florid host, he collected his wits, and resumed his part in the play.

"Oh!" he said. "I—I—that was from one—that was a telegram from the manager of the syndicate, Mr. Cullen; he said it's decided not to try to resyndicate any stock, but to hold it ourselves for the long pull—everything's put off for three or four weeks anyway. I'm having a copy mailed to the house—there's some news in it I thought you might like to see."

"Good! That leaves you free, doesn't it? You'll stay on with us then? Don't say no. I insist on it!"

He Had Been Observed.

"No, I couldn't do that! It's awful kind of you, but—"

"You talk to him, Angela!" laughed Mr. Cullen. "You make him stay. You've got more influence over him than I have, anyhow. And don't you dare to let him get away without a promise—understand?" He passed on, and left them together.

"You walk along with me, sir!" said Angela, imperially. "And you'd better behave yourself—I'm fierce!"

At the same moment that he looked yearningly toward Carol, who up ahead by the doorway was already captive to the wily Armstrong, young Rufus Waring was glaring belligerently toward Hilliard.

The masquerader smiled in defeat, then smiled with sudden realization of the woman-child clinging to him. He squeezed her arm out of sheer affection.

"Your gallant cavalier'll cover me with horrid welts and bruises for this!" he said warningly. "Don't make him jealous, now!" They were now bringing up the rear of the procession in the hallway.

"I'll make 'em well again," said Angela. "I am a good nurse, aren't I?"

He was convulsed by her air of conquest.

"By the old-fashioned method?" He could hardly believe that this was the girl he had taught to climb trees, and make slingshots.

"I'll—" She stopped and blushed. The others were all on the steps; these two were in the dusky vestibule. Waring was fretting impatiently outside.

"Would you?" asked Hilliard. He intended only to tease her; but all at once her head came up, and he could see that her eyes were big and soft and frightened. She was hardly seventeen, and to Hilliard she had never ceased to be the child of two years ago. He bent and kissed her; her lips were trembling, expressive.

"Now we've got to hurry," he said. "Come, dear!"

It was the tone he would naturally use to a child, but he had an uneasy feeling that he had used it to a woman. Children's lips aren't expressive.

And he had another intuition—still more upsetting to him—which was that he had been observed. For on the threshold of the outer door Carol and Armstrong and Rufus Waring, as though turned back to inquire into the cause of Hilliard's and Angela's delay, were standing. . . .

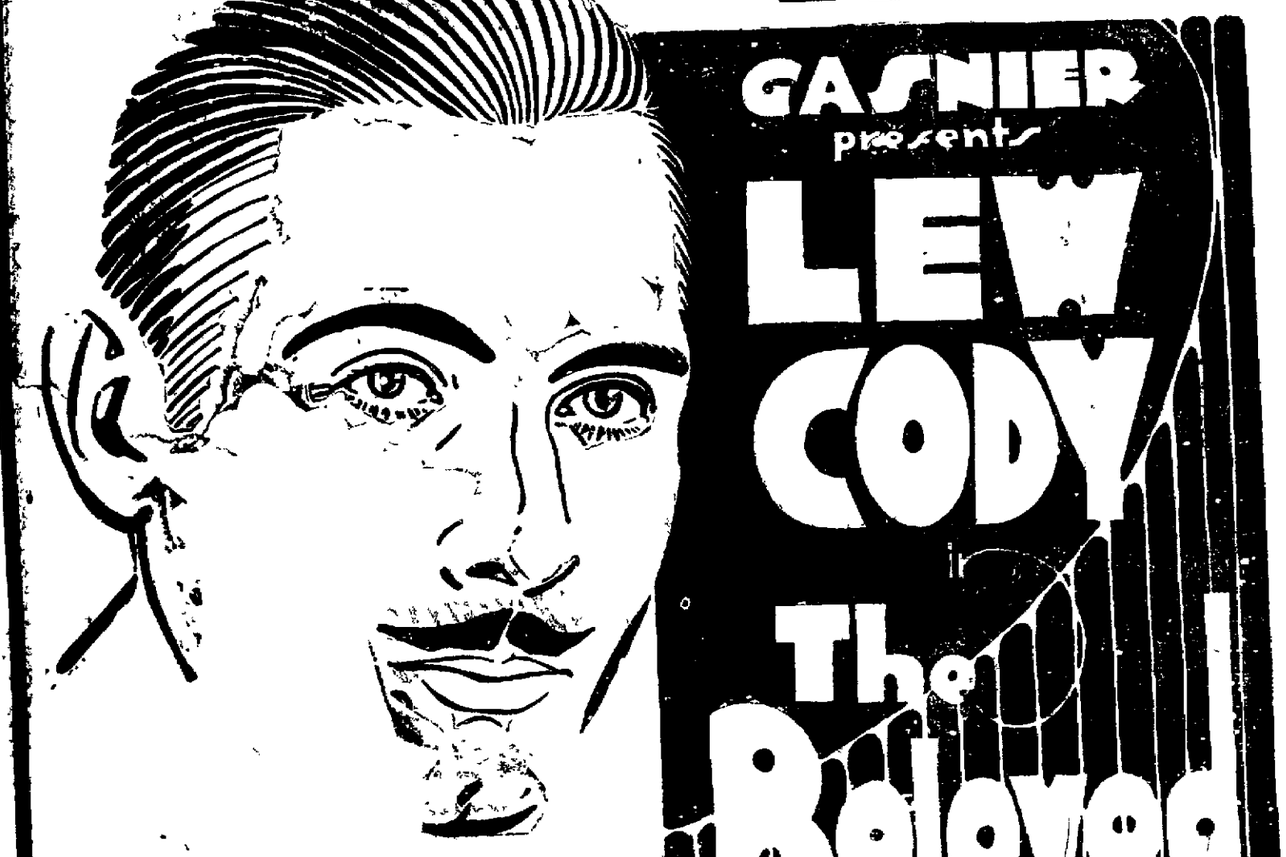

He could not tell, of course, whether they had actually seen him. It was possible that in the dusk of the hallway he had escaped; certainly there was nothing in the manner of any one of the three, when Hilliard joined them, to convince him one way or the other. But he knew that he was in a critical situation; he knew that to any reasonable person who had seen him at that spontaneous little outburst of sentiment, his motives wouldn't appear to be very opaque.

No, the manner of those three who had stood on the threshold was astonishingly casual. Perhaps too casual. . . . Hilliard frowned, and tried to glimpse their various expressions. Ah! Waring, striding stiffly ahead, had thunderclouds on his forehead, and as for Carol . . .

She turned to speak to Armstrong, and Hilliard knew.

For the remainder of the first stage of that walk, he spoke not a word to Angela, who trudged along by his side with God knows what tumults in her bosom. He thought not of Angela, nor concerned himself with the storm he had stirred within her. He was absorbed solely with the puzzle which lay before him, which was to detach Carol as soon as possible, and to explain himself. Otherwise, his reputation was ashes even now.

And, to his unbounded joy, the opportunity came soon—at the end of the road, where the party halted for a moment, to take a referendum as to the route. Armstrong strayed a yard or two too far, and on the instant Hilliard was at Carol's elbow. She said nothing, nor did he; but when the march was resumed, he was beside her—and beating his brains for an introductory remark. He had to convince her he had been trifling with neither herself nor Angela, and he walked a good furlong before he could devise so much as an opening sentence. At length he cleared his throat.

"I've just decided," he said, "that I'm growing old."

"Yes?" She was immeasurably sweet and distant, and Hilliard's courage faltered.

"I have indeed. I've made a most touching discovery. . . . Do I look grandfatherly, Miss Durant?"

"No; I'd hardly say that."

He made a gesture of gratitude. 'You've earned my permanent thanks. But I am growing old. How do I know? Didn't you ever read Leigh Hunt?"

"Just a little." There was a trace of warmth creeping into her voice. Hilliard held his breath:

Say I'm weary, say I'm sad;
Say that health and wealth have missed me,
Say I'm growing old, but add—
Angela kissed me!

He had spoken the lines magnificently, with the precise humor and pathos which go to make them immortal. "I'm glad she fits into the meter," he said thoughtfully, "because I can understand just how Leigh Hunt felt about Jennie."

"And—how do you think that was?"

"Very sensitive," said Hilliard, "and perhaps a little repressed and—decrepit." He smiled reminiscently. "I suppose there are very few things in life that make a man feel more mindful of his own crudity and general worthlessness than to have a child's spontaneous affection." It was the testing venture. She looked at him sidewise.

"More than if—if it weren't a child?"

"I think so." His tone was faultless. "A woman can make a man feel like Romeo, but it takes a very young girl to make him feel like Launcelot—at my age."

"She is adorable, isn't she?" His heart jumped at her cordial acceptance of his statement. "Only—she's seventeen, Mr. Hilliard."

"I know," he said gravely. "And that's why I'm so conscious of my own senility. Because all that beautiful innocence and ignorance is doomed, Miss Durant—who knows that I'm not the very last person to see it? Today, I'm only a much older man, some one she likes; tomorrow, I may be a man without the 'only,' and the more she liked me, the less she'd show it. But there's been mighty little of that sort of thing for me in the last few years from anybody, and I do appreciate it, and I'm not ashamed of it, either."

"No," she said, "you couldn't be. You're too human." She smiled at him, and he was transported at the proof of her sympathy. "If I were in your place, I'd want to feel the same way about it."

He thanked her in his heart. He had saved both Angela and himself, and held his pristine advantage.

But there was no disputing the fact that he had made an active enemy of Waring, and an alert rival out of Armstrong. He smiled grimly as he looked at the man ahead.

"Mr. Armstrong seems to be very nervous," he said. "Not that I can blame him for wanting to be in my place. On the contrary, I'm sorry for him."

"That shows a very good disposition," she said demurely.

"Perhaps it does, and perhaps it doesn't. I believe every man owes it to himself to get what he wants. If he does, he's a success; if he doesn't—it's his own fault."

As he said this, they came abreast of the others, and Armstrong, who had heard the final sentence, whirled toward Hilliard.

"Regardless of methods?" he demanded.

"Why—to some extent," laughed Hilliard. "Why not?"

Armstrong delayed so that the two men were a few paces behind the rest of the group. "Is that your regular creed, Mr. Hilliard?"

"My creed isn't composed of words, Mr. Armstrong, but of actions."

They had spoken so quietly that no one perceiving them would have remotely suspected that a challenge had been offered and accepted.

"Actions do speak louder, of course."

"Mine," said Hilliard, "will give you no offense. But—I generally get what I want."

"So do I. Shall we shake hands on it?" Armstrong was very affable, but tremendously in earnest.

"With pleasure. I can count on your generosity, I see."

"And I on your courtesy."

"Thank you." He went complacently forward, but inwardly he was steeped in perturbation. The man was so deadly sure of himself. Could it be that he was tacitly engaged to Carol in spite of what Angela had surmised or so nearly on the road to an understanding with her that Hilliard was only making a fool of himself?

Armstrong laughed gently. It was like a dagger thrust in Hilliard's heart.

Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Russell left on Wednesday morning for West Point, where they will visit their daughter, Mrs. Colonel Ganoe. Thursday Mrs. William Bixler, North Pine street, reached her 80th birthday anniversary, which was celebrated by a small number of her friends gathering at her home and partaking of a bounteous dinner with the old lady. She is a well-preserved lady for her age and last summer took care of and worked her large garden and lot, and among other vegetables harvested a crop of fourteen bushels of potatoes.

William Patton Russell left on Tuesday for Kansas City, Mo., where he has accepted a responsible position in the Flower Bank, one of the largest financial institutions in that thriving western city.

DuBois people seem to have the right idea of building up a town.

The school board has secured the services of Miss Isabel J. Hanford, to fill the vacancy in the corps of teachers of the High School, made vacant by the resignation of Prof. Mays. The new instructor is a resident of Westfield, N. J., and but lately graduated from State College.

William Freeman, employed at the Crescent Refractories Company brick yard, was unfortunate Tuesday night in crushing a finger on one of his hands, while engaged at his work.

Norman Shaffer, of this place, and Mrs. Stanley Orcutt, of Grampian, were united in wedlock on Tuesday. They will make their home in Grampian.

Miss Margaret Karstetter is ill at her home on South Filbert street, fighting off an attack of the grippe and influenza.

Yesterday was pay day at the brick yard, and a goodly bunch of the filthy lucre was distributed among the employees.

N. C. Rorabaugh, engaged in the insurance business in New York City, spent several days in town this week.

Wm. Holden, who has been assisting James L. Smith in his undertaking establishment, has resigned his position. He has not yet decided just what trade he will enter next.

Mrs. George Kittleberger has been confined to her home for a week past by an attack of the flu.

So far as heard from five persons have registered their names as willing to take the examination for a clerkship in the Curwensville postoffice.

Samuel Norris, who spent the past six weeks in Warren, Pa., returned home on Monday. He was accompanied by his daughter, Miss Esther and Miss Dollie Leech.

Mr. and Mrs. Lew McKenrick are slowly recovering from a severe attack of the influenza.

Tom Brenetti, after a serious illness lasting several weeks, is able to be up and about the house once again.

Cough left and she soon got back strength and flesh.

IF SKIN BREAKS OUT AND ITCHES APPLY SULPHUR

Just the moment you apply Mentho-Sulphur to an itching, burning or broken out skin, the itching stops and healing begins, says a noted skin specialist. This sulphur preparation, made into a pleasant cold cream, gives such a quick relief, even to fiery eczema, that nothing has ever been found to take its place.

Because of its germ destroying prperties, it quickly subdues the itching, cools the irritation and heals the eczema right up, leaving a clear, smooth skin in place of ugly eruptions, rash, pimples or roughness.

You do not have to wait for improvement. It quickly shows. You can get a little jar of Mentho-Sulphur at any drug store.

Keep out of crowds.

Avoid people who have colds.

Don't get excited when you do catch cold. Neglected colds run into pneumonia. Take care of them.

Keep the mouth and throat clean by maintaining as nearly as possible a healthy condition of the mucous membranes.

Many doctors will tell you that for years they have prescribed and used for this purpose a gargle of warm MU-COL solution each night and morning.

This solution is easily and quickly made, economical, too. Simply go to your druggist and say, "I want a package of MU-COL." Dissolve half a teaspoonful in a teacupful of warm water. It is then ready to use.

For 20 years MU-COL was advertised exclusively to physicians. Today any druggist can supply you.

TRUE LOVE NEVER DID RUN SMOOTH BUT THIS IS AWFUL

This recurrent influenza epidemic may not be as severe or far-reaching in its devastating effects as that terrible disease which swept the country in the fall and winter of 1918, but it has already served to cause a great deal of sickness, worry and other inconveniences in this section.

Thus far it has leveled doctors, lawyers, preachers and even undertakers. Not content with invading these higher paid professions it has even so far forgot the proprieties as to tackle members of the poorly-remunerated teaching profession.

The latest circumstance we have in mind comes from the Third Ward of Clearfield. One of the popular Third Ward teachers quitely arranged to enter into the blissful state of matrimony and had yesterday set for the happy day and date. The groom, who resides in Tyrone, arrived in town according to schedule and was very much worried to find his bride-to-be down with the flu.

The happy couple had arranged to leave on the 1:15 train yesterday, but the bride's illness made the schedule look bad. The young lady was game, however, and told the expectant husband to get the license and the preacher and she believed she would be equal to the situation.

The young man hustled over to the Recorder's office hot-foot and Deputy George W. Gulich soon provided the required legal permit for the wedding. That was the easiest part of the performance. Being a stranger in town, the prospective groom enlisted the aid of Mr. Gulich for the securing of a minister to perform the ceremony. One preacher was called on the phone but he had fallen on the ice and was unable to get out of his house. A second was communicated with and on account of his wife being down with the flu he was unable to officiate. A third and a fourth could not be reached on the phone.

By now train time was fast approaching and the expectant couple began to get anxious. When informed that no preacher was available Mr. Gulich was requested to secure the services of a Justice of the Peace, and again the quest was taken up. 'Squire Bain's office was called and it was learned that the long 'Squire was out of town. 'Squire Chorpenning was then apprised of the situation and when he heard the bride-to-be was down with the flu he, being somewhat under the weather himself, refused to take a chance and by that time the 1:15 train was passing the curve at the brewery en route to Tyrone and the wedding [illegible] hadn't [illegible] start.

Joy was far removed about this time and the poor unfortunate couple were beginning to believe the whole world was conspiring against them. But there is a silver lining to all clouds and a friend, after finally locating a minister willing to brave the jinx conditions and the bride finally secured and artistically wed.

The bride improved immediately, and was smiles once more and the wedding journey—tho delayed a few hours—was undertaken last evening with all cares left behind.

LONDON WOMEN ARE KEEPING JOBS THEY HELD DURING WAR

LONDON.—Women took the helm in wartime and they have no intention of giving it up. It is now quite a common sight in London streets to see Daphne at the wheel of the automobile while Adonis leans back in the purple plush.

One may see women in evening dress driving themselves through the streets of London en route for the ball or the theatre, and the little car, pretty enough for Cinderella at a pantomime, zig-zags daintily in and out of the heavy traffic like a venturesome kitten in a den of lions.

Wanted It Understood.

In the bygone days when street car fares were 5 cents for grownups and 3 cents for children under 12, two small boys of 12 and 7 mounted the platform. The younger boy had been promised the 2 cents change from the dime they had for carfare. He handed the coin to the conductor, who did not immediately turn over the pennies. The anxious child then remarked politely but forcefully "I'm worth only 3 cents."—Chicago Tribune

ASK DAMAGES FOR DEATH OF COALPORT LAD ON RAILROAD

Suit was entered in the Clearfield County Courts yesterday by Attorneys Charles J. Margiotti, of Punxsutawney, and John C. Arnold of Clearfield on behalf of Ferdinando and Gemma Pisaneschi, of Coalport, and against Walker D. Hines, director general of railroads, and the Pennsylvania [illegible] it is sought to recover [illegible] damages for the death [illegible] of a Pennsylvania [illegible] Pisaneschi the [illegible] years, son of the defendants.

The statement recited that on July 9, 1919, a Pennsylvania freight [illegible] to block the grade crossing at Pine street, in the borough of Coalport, and that even though the cars were blocking the crossing making it impossible for pedestrians or vehicles to cross no trainman or watchman was placed on guard there to warn travelers. That during this time the little Pisaneschi boy came along and attempted to cross under the train. When between the rails the train started suddenly and the child was caught and dragged a distance of some 62 feet. Persons who witnessed the accident signalled the trainmen and attempted to acquaint them with the situation, but the statement continues "such signals were carelessly and negligently received" but no attention paid to them and before the child, who was yet alive, could be removed from the track the train started to back and several cars ran over the lad crushing his life out.

The case will be placed upon the trial list for May court.

The association has planned and scheduled a number of interesting activities for the month of March, which includes gymnasium classes, entertainments, lectures, bowling, basket ball games, etc.

The Y. M. C. A. bowling team will journey to Altoona Saturday evening to bowl a return game with the Altoona team.

The directors and business men have paid for several Y. M. C. A. membership tickets for worthy boys—for particulars see the secretary.

The boy scouts will hold a shooting match with the old deer hunters next week.

LAST HOME GAME OF BASKET BALL TOMORROW NITE

The last home game on the League schedule will be played on the High school floor Friday evening when Punxsutawney brings their basketball team here to compete with the C. H. S. five. Punxsutawney held first place in the League until last week when DuBois assumed the lead, due to Punxy's losing to New Bethlehem. With such a fine record in their favor, Punxsputawney hopes to repeat, on our floor, the success of the game played on their floor, which was greatly in their favor.

However, Clearfield has improved a great deal since that game and with any kind of reasonable circumstances hopes to give Punxsy their second defeat. Practice work the past week has been very encouraging and Coach Heisey promises a bang-up game for Friday.

If you want to see the snappiest game of the season just come around tomorrow evening—it's going to be a hummer.

MEAT CAUSE OF KIDNEY TROUBLE

Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers—Meat forms uric acid.

If [illegible] must have your meat every day, [illegible] flush your kidneys with [illegible] occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irirtated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

UNION HEADS PRESENT DEMAND THAT WILSON VETO RAILWAY CONTROL BILL

COMMITTEE OF FIFTEEN PRESENT THE DEMANDS

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25—The railroad unions today asked President Wilson to veto the railroad bill. A delegation of fifteen union leaders called at the White House to leave with Secretary Tumulty, a resolution adopted by railroad unions which have been in session here for several days. They request that he send the bill back to congress without his approval. The spokesman handed Tumulty a memorial urging that Wilson veto the measure.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25—Following conferences that lasted well after mid-night railroad union leaders today were putting the final touches to the memorial urging President Wilson to veto the Cummins-Esch bill under which the nation's railroads will be returned to private ownership Monday. Meanwhile the railroad executives were making last minute preparations for the turning over of their property. There is much speculation as to what course the President will take. Labor leaders have made plans to make the railroad situation an issue at the coming campaign if the President signs the bill. Many leaders have given up hope that the President will veto it. They regard the memorial as a public protest putting labor on record against the bill.

COMMENT OF NEW YORK NEWSPAPERS ON COLBY APPOINTMENT OF WILSON

NEW YORK, Feb. 25—Comment of New York morning newspapers on the appointment of Bainbridge Colby as Secretary of State is as follows:

The Times—The country will assume that the change in the selection involves no change in politics. The President will be his own minister of foreign affairs and Secretary Colby's mind will go along with his. It would be better in his next appointment if Mr. Wilson would offer to satisfy the public rather than surprise the public.

The Sun and Herald declared: The nation is startled by Mr. Wilson's appointment of Bainbridge Colby as secretary of state at this juncture of our crucial international affairs. The Democratic party is shocked and humiliated that among all of the tried and true Democrats of the country there was none to fill this first office in the gift of the President.

The World declared: There could be no more complete triumph of custom and precedent than the selection of Bainbridge Colby to succeed Robert Lansing.

NEW LIBERTY THEATRE TO BE OPENED

Clearfield's Beautiful New Playhouse Will Feature Lew Cody Tomorrow All Day

HOUSE LAST WORD IN COMFORT

Manager Fred Thompson's New Liberty Theatre, one of the neatest, most finely appointed and very best ventilated picture shows in this section of the state, will be opened to the public for the first time on Friday, February 27th (tomorrow) afternoon and evening.

Mr. Thompson purchased the old Windsor Hotel property from James Mahaffey early last summer and immediately after getting possession of same started a crew of workmen in to remodel and convert it into an uptodate picture show or movie theatre. Under the direction of Architect and Contractor Frank Snoke he has succeeded even beyond his fondest expectations, and we feel safe in saying that all of Clearfield will marvel at the magnificence, arrangement, equipment, comfort and general attractiveness of the new theatre.

The outstanding feature predominant is comfort and convenience of patrons, with box office returns a secondary consideration, because the former feature always controls or compels the latter. With that idea in mind Mr. Thompson overlooked nothing to be reasonably expected in a first class theatre—even to the supplying of a handsome French plate glass mirror in the lobby where milady can properly realign her millinery and give hat and hair that deft, magic or necessary feminine touch before going out onto the street at the conclusion of a picture.

The theatre proper is 43x87 feet in size, with a height of 22 feet. The main entrance is on Market street, the outside doors opening into an exceptionally handsome lobby 18x26 feet in size and 12 feet high. The screen equipment is of the latest style non-flicker Gold Fibre and is 12x16 feet in size. Two late style Bauer Big 6 picture machines are installed.

The theatre has a seating capacity of a little more than 600 and is equipped with 19 and 20 inch. roomy and comfortable American seats, acknowledged to be the best on the market. There is comfort and convenience in every line of the seats and they are so placed as to afford ample room in getting in or out.

The floors are of selected maple flooring, while handsomely frescoed steel ceilings add greatly to the beauty of both lobby and auditorium. The walls are double solid brick construction and the building is comfortably heated with steam heat from its own plant.

The auditorium is equipped with four double 6x7 foot exit doors, two on either side, while two 5x7 foot emergency exits adjoin the main entrance from the lobby. These safety exits extend completely around the building and make it possible to empty the big auditorium in case the emergency arises in a few seconds of time.

Another feature and one which eclipses all theatres generally and all others in this section is the ventilating scheme and the lighting. A 6x6 foot ceiling ventilator is installed over the middle of the theatre, while three large windows on either side allow the supplying of copious currents of fresh, pure air throughout the entire room after each afternoon or evening performance and should serve to make The Liberty Theatre the healthiest assembly room in the town

The lighting scheme, which was evolved by Mr Thompson, long a lighting and electrical expert, is perfect and leaves nothing to be desired in this direction The picture machines are installed in an 8x9x7 foot asbestos booth and there is absolutely no danger of accident in the theatre even though trouble be had with the film rolls, which sometimes occurs in picture shows.

The Liberty Theatre sure is a fine place and need but be seen to be appreciated It opens tomorrow with Lew Cody in "The Beloved Cheater" Manager Thompson in order to give the little folks a chance to look the place over will give a free matinee to the children from 1 to 6 o'clock.

FEDERAL AGENTS CLASH ON DRY ENFORCEMENT

Major Dalrymple Pours Eight Barrels Of Homemade Wine Into Gutters of Streets

MET NO ARMED RESISTANCE

IRON RIVER, MICH., Feb. 25—Major A. B. Dalrymple and his federal prohibition law enforcement squad left Iron River tonight for Chicago. The met with no open resistance and the "whiskey rebellion" was regarded as ended, although a searching investigation has been promised by Washington.

A warrant that had been issued for the arrest of Major Dalrymple was not served and the major failed to carry out his threats to arrest District Attorney McDonough for interference with federal officers.

Eight barrels of wine, which had been seized by L. G. Grove, the local federal prohibition officer and which had been recovered by State Attorney McDonough, was poured into the streets by Major Dalrymple. There was no demonstration. It was the seizure of this wine that started the "rebellion." The district attorney had charged the federal authorities had seized it without due process of law.

The meeting between Major Dalrymple and State Attorney McDonough amounted to nothing more than an exchange of sarcasm. Major Dalrymple went to the office of McDonough to explain the purpose of the federal agents in coming to Iron River, but McDonough was not there. In the afternoon McDonogh decided to visit the major at Iron Inn, where he was stopping.

Someone told Major Dalrymple that McDonough was looking for him, and accompanied by four agents the major came out of the dining room. Mr. McDonough walked over to Major Dalrymple.

"My name is McDonough," he said.

Major Dalrymmple looked at him undecidedly, and then said "I'm glad to meet you."

"I have come here, Mr. Dalrymple," said the state attorney, "to issue a warning to you. I want you to heed it. What I want to tell you is this, that if you or your men attempt to arrest me or my aids without due process of law, I will arrest you and your men and lock you up. Furthermore, if you or your men attempt to enter the private homes of citizens here without due process of law, we will likewise arrest you at once. My purpose is to put you where you belong, Mr. Dalrymple."

"Mr. McDonough, this seems entirely unnecessary," said the major. "I have come here or the purpose of enforcing the law. It is not necessary that you come to me. I went to your office this morning"

"I was not at my office this morning when you called," replied McDonough. "I have the responsibility in this matter and merely came here to warn you of the situation in which you are."

Major Dalrymple stammered, "I think this is a high-handed grandstand play."

"You are a natural grand-stand player yourself," returned McDonough "You started something and will see it through, Mr. Dalrymple. You have my position in the matter clearly in your mind, I hope, and I have no more to say."

Major Dalrymple just before this encounter with McDonough received a telegram from John F. Kramer, federal director of prohibition, stating that United States District Attorney Myron Walker, of Grand Rapids, would come to Iron River for a conference before definite action would be taken It was also learned thru press dispatches that H. B. Maylord, chief aid of Director Kramer, is on his way from Washington to investigate the entire situation.

CONGRESSMAN JONES SEEKS RE-ELECTION

Representative Of Twenty-First District Deserves Support Of The Voters

HAS MADE EXCELLENT RECORD

Our congressman, Evan J. Jones, of McKean county, today announces that he will be a candidate for a second term and there are various and sundry reasons why Congressman Jones should be given the nomination and the office at the general election. In Congressman Jones, the district has had a real representative in the lower house of our national lawmaking body and one who has got a lot of pleasure out of performing his duty as a congressman. For the first time in years the door of our congressman's office has been wide open and everyone having business to transact could "walk right in" and get a hearing. Congressman Jones has not done any great big spectacular stunts, he has not landed any great percentage of our citizenry in the seats of the high and mighty and he has not come back to us with any great big pork barrels. What he has done is greater than all of these. He has kept his Washington office open to all comers and given his personal attention to the mountains of mail which arrived from the people in the four counties of his district. No letter has gone unanswered. No accommodation was too insignificant or too great to miss his attention.

Always On The Job

It is said of Jones that he is so punctual in his attendance at the sessions that the clerk never calls his name at roll call. Since the beginning of his term there have been only a few isolated instances in which he has been marked as an absentee and in these cases he was forced by necessity to be absent. He has been in Washington almost continuously since he assumed office and has taken an active part in all the vital problems that have been up for consideration.

His Work for Service Men

Inquiry at his office develops the interesting fact that he has performed a definite and far reaching service for two thousand different service men in looking after the many claims and adjustments growing out of their discharge. Many of these cases have been called to the attention of readers of The Progress from time to time. This work comprised claims and information of every conceivable form and many of the cases called for the most diligent and painstaking efforts on the part of Mr. Jones. Perhaps the most valuable assistance he has rendered the service men has been in connection with the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. He has kept in close personal touch with this department and as a result thereof and his prompt attention to this matter there are indeed few claims in this district which have not been adjusted.

Excellent Record

As a congressman and aside from these little accommodations which go to make an efficient public official, Mr. Jones has a record in congress of which any first termer can be justly proud. In brief it is as follows:

On the formation of the committees at the beginning of the first session of the 66th Congress, he was placed on one of the major committees—the Committee on Agriculture.

Later, at the beginning of the second session, by reason of the resignation of Hon. J. Hampton Moore, who was elected Mayor of Philadelphia, a vacancy was created on the Committee on Inter-State and Foreign Commerce. By the unanimous request of the Pennsylvania Republican Delegation, Congressman Jones was nominated and elected to fill this vacancy. This is one of the most important committees in congress and it is very seldom that a new member has been placed on it.

There are about eighty committees in congress, about eight of which are considered major committees. A member of a major committee cannot be a amember of any other committee at the same time, by a Rule of the House. Mr. Jones has already been a member of two of these major committees. His election to the Inter-State and Foreign Commerce Committee may be viewed in the light of a distinct promotion.

As a member of the Agricultural Committee, Mr. Jones was active in all the legislation before that committee. He was on the sub-committee that drafted the Cold Storage Bill, and had much to do with the construction of the Cold Storage Law. He also took a very active part in the hearings on the appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture.

He has been delegated by the Penna. Delegation to make a special study of pending legislation, in order that he may report on such measures to that delegation, giving his views and conclusions for their information and guidance. His adverse report on the Mondell Bill has been read by the members, not only from Pennsylvania, but also from other states, and had much to do with the change in sentiment on this piece of legislation.

Has Redeemed Pledges

According to party rules and practice a second term will be conceded to Mr. Jones but this will not be his biggest asset in coming before the voters. In ever yvillage and community he will find people whom he has befriended and assisted in the many problems which the average citizen has had with his government, particularly those of military ops. Letters addressed to him have received prompt attention and everything in the power of a congressman has been done to give assistance. When Mr. Jones was a candidate four years ago he called at The Progress office and stated his platform. He stated plainly that he would go to Congress as he would consider it a great honor to represent this district, and if elected he would spend his time in Washington, keep an office open there for the quick dispatch of business and the consideration of his constituents and work everlastingly for the betterment of the interests of the district. Mr. Jones has fulfilled his pledge to us. He has been a real representative of this district, according to world badly and will need him the next two years. Mr. Jones deserves the support of every citizen who believes in rewarding a faithful servant and a devoted worker.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TAKES NOTE OF NEW JERSEY LIQUOR LEGISLATION

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25—Federal prohibition officials today were studying the situation in New Jersey where the lower House of Legislature passed a bill legalizing the sale of beer containing 3½ per cent. alcohol which is contrary to the Volstead act. Federal Prohibition Commission John S. Kramer would not discuss the situation declaring that the New Jersey upper House must pass the bill and Governor Edwards must sign it before it becomes a law. It was emphasized that the federal law will be enforced and arrests will follow the first sale of 3½ per cent. beer in New Jersey.

ARTICLE TEN AND LEAGUE COVENANT WILL BE LAST TO BE DISPOSED

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25—The Senate today adopted a motion by Senator Lodge to postpone discussion of reservations on Artilce Ten and the League of Nations covenant until all other reservations have been disposed of. There was no debate in opposition to Lodge's motion. Senator Knox asked the purpose of it and Lodge replied "everybody knows that this is the chief question in the controversy and it will save time if we dispose of the other reservations first."Hitchcock, Democratic leader, cast the only vote against Lodge's move.

$128,000 WAGE LOSS DUE TO STRIKES IN CLEARFIELD COUNTY

HARRISBURG, Feb. 25—Striking coal industrial workers in Clearfield county $128,000 during the last year, according to a report issued by Edward B. Connelly, commissioner of the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry. It is estimated that approximately 32,000 working days were lost through the labor disputes. The state's bureau of conciliation and arbitration was notified of 3 strikes in that county during 1919.

Fourteen millions of dollars is the estimated cost of the 456 strikes that occurred in Pennsylvania last year. The workmen lost approximately 500,000 working days while the disputes were on. There were 172,000 employes involved in the strikes.

Textile workers displayed the greatest amount of unrest, for 146 strikes occurred in that industry. The metal trades had 78 disputes, and the building trades reported 54 strikes.

ENGLISH AS SHE WILL BE

That the slang and idioms of today will be correct English tomorrow is the opinion of Prof. H. Glicksman of the English department, University of Wisconsin.

"Our language is made up of what was once slang, idiom, colloquialism and jargon," he said, and warned that the only deplorable feature about slang was its tendency to produce mental slovenliness.

Prof. Glicksman then referred to the word "mob" as slang of 200 years ago and denounced in The Spectator by Addison.

"It is an abbreviation of the word 'mobile.' Even so the word 'pep' is vital and virile and will survive with the world 'snappy.' But to gain recognition slang must be free from vulgarity and cheapness," said Glicksman.

"The term 'How do you get that way?' is condemned because it is meaningless but the term 'he has pull' is approved as it is the opposite of 'push' a word that has forged ahead through its own strength."

OLD PARTIES THROUGH WITH JOHN B.

Those who still hang on to the hope that at one convention or the other John Barleycorn will be given one more chance for his life might just as well begin casting about for another straw to cling to. No such hope is held out.

The carefully-noted attitude of officials at party headquarters, coupled with a soewhat exhaustive inquiry among party leaders and party followers reveals absolutely nothing resembling a serious intention on the part of either Republicans or Democrats of broaching the subject of "booze" at Chicago or San Francisco.

A study of the question failed to show that the alleged demand for drink had caused even a ripple at either of the National party headquarters.

The attitude of the old parties seems to be that the subject is loaded with a combination of dynamite and asphyxiating gas, and few politicians will willingly discuss it without first "shushing" and locking the door.

PASTOR AND WIFE HONORED

Rev. and Mrs. John M. Waddell, of Bellevue, were honor guests last night at an informal farewell reception given them by the members of the congregation of the Bellevue Presbyterian church, of which Rev. Waddell has been pastor for years. Sharing honors with Rev. and Mrs. Waddell, was Mrs. S. B. Storer, mother of Mrs. Waddell, who will leave with the family March 1st, for Blairstown, N. J., where Rev. Waddell has accepted a position in the Blairstown Academy. The men of the congregation, as a parting gift, presented Rev. Waddell with a well-filled purse and a gold watch and guard, and Mrs. Waddell was presented with a gold wrist watch, a gift from the women of the congregation, and Mrs. Storer was presented with a pin. A luncheon was served in the church dining room later in the evening.—Pittsburg Post Today.

DELIVERED PATRIOTIC ADDRESS

Deputy Attorney General William I. Swoope, Clearfield's ablest public speaker, addressed a large Washington's birthday audience at the Llanerch Presbyterian church, of Philadelphia, last Sunday evening. It was a patriotic occasion and Mr. Swoope spoke on "The Duties of the Hour." His address was exceptionally well received. The audience was made up of the American Legion, Boy Scouts, Grand Army of the Republic and other patriotic organizations.

The sky of Italy is noted for its clearness. The blue is deeper, not because the dust there is finer than in the northern countries, but because in the countries of the north, due to the greater coolness of the air, the vapor more readily condenses upon the dust particles.

PROBLEMS FACING STRICKEN WORLD

Shall Chaos or Reconstruction in Europe Follow the Great World War?

RADICALISM IN THE SADDLE

Without a Definite Program, People Everywhere Are Demanding a Change in Present Conditions—Threat of "Direct Action."

Article XI.

By FRANK COMERFORD.

Radicalism in Europe is rampant. The workers are active, the middle class sympathetic. The industrial centers are hotbeds. The conservatism of the farmers and peasants is breaking down. It is hard to define this radicalism—it is without form. It isn't a definite program, it isn't even political. The people are dissatisfied. The red flag is popular. It promises a short cut. It answers the cry of the impatient. I was surprised to see many of the very men who fought so gallantly under their country's flag and who but yesterday would have torn the red flag from the flagpole, now defending it, carrying it and following it. I am sure they do not know what the red flag stands for. To them it represents a protest against things as they are. Summed up in a word, the attitude of mind of the workers of Europe is eagerness for a change—some change—any change. Every one knows the symptoms, understands what is wrong, but the remedy is only vaguely discussed.

I attach much significance to the new attitude of organized labor in Europe. Labor unions formerly concerned themselves with wages, terms of employment, shop conditions, safety appliances, recognition of their right of collective bargaining. Since the war the labor movement has taken up questions entirely outside of its field, questions properly the concern of all the people, questions of government policy. I have in mind recent demands made by the working men in England, France and Italy. These demands were addressed to the regularly and properly elected representatives of the people, the governments. They were accompanied by threats of general strikes if they were not acceded to. This step is an innovation; it is revolutionary.

The working men are citizens and have a voice in the government equal with all other citizens. After the people have selected their representatives, the men chosen should be responsible to all of the people without regard to class or station. A government by one portion of the people is autocratic. Government of the people, for the people, and by the people, means all of the people. The effort on the part of a minority in the labor movement, who challengingly call themselves socialists, to dictate to the state, representing all of the people, is an attack upon democracy. If successful it would destroy the state and leave the great majority of the people, including the workers, less free than they are now. What sane man, whether he is a working man or not, is in favor of minority government?

Demands Hard to Understand.

I witnessed many demonstrations in Europe under the red flag, in which the leaders demanded three things from the government.

First, they demanded the release of all the men in jail who were held for political crimes. These included men found guilty of sedition and treason during the war. I cannot understand this demand. Why should men be released from jail who sought to stab in the back the men who went to the trenches to fight and die for freedom? I should much prefer to see all of the burglars released. If I am compelled to choose between the traitor and the burglar, I will have no trouble in making my decision.

Second, they demanded that no soldiers be sent to Russia. The agitation on this point was so strong that when the British government attempted to send soldiers to Russia last summer (1919), the soldiers mutinied, and so far as I am able to learn the feeling was so strong, the situation so critical, the government did not dare court-martial them.

Third, they demanded that all conscription laws be abolished.

It is apparent that these demands, coming from a minority, backed by a threat, constitute an invasion of the rights of the people. The question isn't whether or not one believes these things should be done; the issue is the method resorted to. Personally I do not believe soldiers should be sent to Russia. In my opinion allied intermeddling has been stupid and harmful, but if these matters of general public policy are to be decided, all of the people should have a vote in making up the verdict.

When you consider this new attitude of labor in conjunction with the growing popularity of "direct action," it indicates that the labor movement is losing faith in law and political action. I am not saying that their experience with politics, their betrayal by men they have supported, the default of political parties to carry out pre-election pledges, may not be responsible for a distrust in political government. I am not denying that capital has had the ear of government more than it should; that property has been given more thought than human beings. I am concerned with the danger that these innovations promise, a danger to the working men themselves, a menace to law and order, without which no one is secure, without which there can be no freedom.

Political Action Called Failure.

I heard a speech in London that deeply impressed me. It was applauded by several thousand men and women—average good British working people. Most of the men wore service badges. The speaker, a clean young Englishman of about thirty-five, said:

"Political action is a failure. We vote and we are betrayed. Political parties are the agents of hands of capital. Their purpose is to keep the workers apart, knowing that divided we are powerless. The only time they are willing we should unite is when war calls for men. What did we win in the war? Nothing. We thought we had a stake in the game, that the hand we were playing was our own. Now that it is over we have discovered that we won nothing.

"What did the working man ever get by voting, except the worst of it? The word vote comes from a Latin word, meaning 'to wish.' Who ever got anything by wishing?

"We are like the story in Bellamy's 'Looking Backward.' You remember he spoke of a coach. On top of this coach the capitalists sit in the sunshine enjoying the ride. On the side of the coach, hanging by their fingernails and toenails are the hundreds of thousands who make up the middle class. Millions of men are pulling the coach. They are sweating and trudging—they are the working men. Running along the side of the coach are millions more, fighting to get a chance to get hold of the rope and pull the coach. They are the idle. There is only one thing to do. That is to stop pulling the coach, let go of the rope. Don't wish about it; do it. The fellows on the top of the coach don't do any wishing—they hoss and drive."

The crowd cheered. There is some truth in the speech. It is true that the working man has not had a square deal; but the fact that he has not had fair treatment does not make the plan of direct action a sane, wise plan. Revolution would only lead to blood and disorder and leave the very men who revolted in a worse plight than they are now. The millions who are the majority have an infinitely better weapon than force. They have the ballot. They are in the majority. Men must think their way out of the wilderness. They cannot fight their way out. When they try to they go deeper in.

Bolshevism Finding Favor.

I found the word bolshevism in the minds and on the lips of the working people of Europe. I expected to find them antibolshevik if for no other reason than that bolshevism came from Russia and the bolsheviki made peace with Germany while the allies were in a death struggle with her with the result in doubt. I found them confessing their faith in bolshevism, speaking of it as a new religion, resenting the obstacles their own governments had placed in its way.

In Ireland, the last place I expected to find a leaning toward bolshevism, I found an open devotion to it. The Irish people are in many respects the most conservative in the world. The only radicalism they have ever shown is the revolutionary spirit expressed in uprisings for freedom. The Irish are a people of reminiscence and tradition. The Celtic mind is devoted to form and custom. I was present at the Irish Federation of Labor convention held in August, 1919, at Drogheda. The delegates to this convention, representing 300,000 union men and women, went on record almost unanimously for bolshevism. I later learned that few of them, if any, knew exactly what bolshevism was. I asked a leading spirit of the convention if he believed in communism, the abolition of the private ownership of property, and he said, "Of course not; that's rank nonsense; socialism; impossible and impractical." The pro and con of bolshevism has from the beginning been partisan and prejudiced. Working men are bolsheviks because employers are against it, and employers are against it because the men are for it.

Duty Before the World.

Millions of gallant young men have fought for the new world. Hundreds of thousands died to establish it. If we fail to honor the promise given to them we dishonor ourselves. What does a new world mean? What was the old world like? It was a world where toil for myriads of honest workers, men and women, purchased nothing better than squalor, penury, anxiety and wretchedness—a world scarred by slums and disgraced by sweating, where unemployment through the vicissitudes of industry brought despair to multitudes of humble homes; a world where, side by side with want, there was waste of the inexhaustible riches of the earth, partly through ignorance and want of forethought, partly through entrenched selfishness. If we relieve the lesse of that world we shall betray the heroic dead. We shall be guilty of the basest perfidy that ever blackened a people's fame.—David Lloyd George.

"I Want Two Copies"

Said a farmer to me the other day: "I get one now, but if my wife or my daughter or my son happens to meet the mailman I have to fight to get a look at it. Put me down for another subscription for so I can have a copy all to myself." That, said I to myself, is an idea worth passing on. It won't break any farmer these days to buy $2.00 worth of the Great National Farm Weekly—and if it will make peace in his family—say, come on. Line forms on the left!

You don't hesitate to buy two postage stamps so you and your wife can both write letters; or two newspapers so you can both read. Two copies a week of THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN cost even less. The Governor of one state bought three subscriptions for his farm and two more for his office in the state capitol the other day. . . .

Of course I'm not arguing for two or three or five subscriptions until you have one. But the one is of vital importance to you, as well as to the wife and the boys. Besides giving weekly entertainment for the whole family, a single idea in one of the 52 big issues may save you $1.00. Buy one subscription for only one dollar today!

Hot Water Each Morning Puts Roses in Your Cheeks

To look one's best and feel one's best is to enjoy an inside bath each morning to flush from the system the previous day's waste, sour fermentations and poisonous toxins before it is absorbed into the blood. Just as coal, when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ashes, so the food and drink taken each day leave in the alimentary organs a certain amount of indigestible material, which if not eliminated, forms toxins and poisons which are then sucked into the blood through the very ducts which are intended to suck in only nourishment to sustain the body.

If you want to see the glow of healthy bloom in your cheeks, to see your skin get clearer and clearer, you are told to drink every morning upon arising, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless means of washing the waste material and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary tract, before putting more food into the stomach.

Girls and women with sallow skins, liver spots, pimples or pallid complexion, also those who wake up with a coated tongue, bad taste, nasty breath, others who are bothered with headaches, bilious spells, acid stomach or constipation should begin this phosphated hot water drinking and are assured of very pronounced results in one or two weeks.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs very little at the drug store but is sufficient to demonstrate that just as soap and hot water cleanses, purifies and freshens the skin on the outside, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the inside organs. We must always consider that internal sanitation is vastly more important than outside cleanliness, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do.

Women who desire to enhance the beauty of their complexion should just try this for a week and notice results.

A snuffling, sneezing, coughing child certainly is a reflection upon the parents. To permit a child to suffer from a cold is more than negligence; it is cruel. A cold that hangs on weakens the system and can easily turn into something serious. Mrs. J. S. Pitson, 376 E. 158 St., Cleveland, Ohio, writes: "I can't speak too highly of Foley's Honey and Tar. THE NEXT WAR

Gas In Next War

This is the second of a series of statements by eminent French scientists, inventors and military leaders on the subject of the next war and the fate of the people in the face of development by science of the use of new weapons for killing.

By GENERAL DEBENEY
(Director of French College of War)

"Should war begin again now, aviation and especially gas, would play one of the most important parts. The progress of aviation would make the rear of each front, and very far in, extremely dangerous, and the progress of chemistry would permit to use gas on zones of such an extent that it cannot be imagined.

"But this would be the sense in which the war would develop, much more than the immediate effect that would take place from the beginning of hostilities.

"Making gas is naturally rapidly done, because all the manufacturers of chemical products—still so numerous in Germany—can be requisitioned; but to make airplanes is much slower.

"Thus, while there will be people at work to prepare ways of attacking it is evident that others will be preparing ways of protecting themselves and that means once again the race between the novice agents and the defence against those agents.

"The defence against gas seems to be more difficult than against airplanes. I believe that, against airplanes, the anti aircraft artillery is susceptible of making rapid progress, and perhaps, in that very instance gas wil be one of the best ways if with appropriate shells the air can be poisoned all around the attacking airplane. It would be so much more effective to create, for example, a sphere of poisoned air a mile around the airplane, instead of trying to hit the machine directly with bits of the shell.

"Concerning the defense against gas, I expect that our chemists will find some 'anti gas' neutralizing other gas. But until further order, I am afraid more of gas than airplanes, and this. because there are no products which can be so easily made in secret.

"We will be able to control the cannon and ammunition works in Germany, but it will be the worst job to watch the manufacture of chemical products. A laboratory secret, a procedure carefully kept secret, and these manufactures become tomorrow war toxic products makers. This is the main danger.

"As regards strategy, it could not be munch modified, as long as we have not improved our transportation system. We can expect airplanes to carry hundreds of men, but not yet whole divisions. It may take place some day, but we have not arrived there.'

Next War at Sea

This is the third of a series of discussions by prominent scientific, naval, and military experts on the subject of the next war. Commandant X, a high authority of the French navy, whose name naval usage does not permit to be used, suggests that submarines may one day become in fact warships.

By COMMANDANT X
(High Authority of French Navy)

"What would be a new war, from the naval point of view, depends on the enemy and the kind of war that would have to be fought. For the time being, the French navy and all the world navies are waiting, and that is about all.

"But a large development of the submarine warfare may be expected. Submarines might become real warships. During the last war, except at the end, and in exceptional cases, submarines employed dodginess exclusively. They used to hide and flee as soon as they were discovered. They never accepted fight, even patrol boats or cargo boats.

"In the future, nothing prevents the building of submarines which will be armed sufficiently and equipped to fight naval units such as torpedo boats.

"It is likely that the decpest transformation of future war would be the most intense use of submarines and water planes. We will witness one day or the other a new evolution of sea aviation.

"The field open to submarines and water planes is indefinite. Their importance will increase. One might see during the future war lively fights between submarines, or against ships or airplanes.

"Nothing opposes either to the development of using boats directed from away with electric cables, like the Germans employed on the Belgian coast to attack British monitors.

"Regarding the artillery, a formidable increase of the range, and a real 'race to the caliber' must be forecasted. To destroy enormous ships, enormous shells will be necessary. The shell of 450 millimeters will become a minimum for the big guns.

"Concerning the changes in tactics, the greatest circumspection rules now. The High School of the navy has just been formed, and it has not been stated yet whether there will be a course of tactics.

"The suggestions for the naval budget are very timid, very modest, but it is probable that the parliament will still make it less, on account of the high price of building. The idea is to act in such a way that the French navy does not disappear and keeps sufficient elements to develop itself spontaneously, if necessary.

"The naval power of a country does not only depend on the value of its material, but also and above all on its staff. In France, soldiers can be improvised, thanks to the characteristic qualities of the race; but even in France, and nowhere sailors can be made so. The maritime traditions must be kept intact with the help of well formed chiefs, and this is what will be done.

TURN HAIR DARK WITH SAGE TEA

Grandma kept her locks dark, glossy and youthful with a simple mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grand mother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—In a base hospital at Rouilly, France, his face disfigured beyond recognition, an American soldier serving in the French army attracts attention by his deep despondency. Asked by the surgeons for a photograph to guide them in making over his face, he offers in derision a picture of the Saylor, bidding them take that as a model. They do so, making a remarkable likeness.

CHAPTER II.—Invalided home, on the boat he meets Martin Harmon, New York banker, who is attracted by his remarkable features. The ex-soldier gives his name as "Henry Hilliard," and his home as Syracuse, New York. He left there under a cloud, and is embittered against his former fellow townsmen. Harmon makes him a proposition to sell mining stocks in Syracuse, concealing his identity. He accepts it, seeing in it a chance to make good and prove he has been unjustly maligned.

CHAPTER III.—In Syracuse "Hilliard" (in reality Richard Morgan) is accepted as a stranger. He visits James Cullen, a former employer, relating a story of the death of Richard Morgan, and is surprised at the regret shown by Cullen and his youthful daughter Angela. While at the Cullen home Carol Durant, Morgan's former fiancee, makes a call.

CHAPTER IV.—Hilliard repeats to Carol his story of Morgan's death and is deeply moved by the evidence of her deep feeling for the supposed dead man. He resolves, however, to continue the deception.

CHAPTER V.—Next day Hilliard gathers from Angela that Carol had always loved Dick Morgan, and while delivering to her a letter supposedly from her former fiancee realizes that his affection is unchanged. His welcome by Doctor Durant, Carol's father, also shakes his resolution to continue the deception, but he supposes it.

CHAPTER VI.—In Syracuse Hilliard is looked upon as a capitalist and mining expert, and in that capacity, in pursuance of his object, interests Cullen in the possibility of wealth in mining properties. The Cullens and Hilliard go to the Durant home for dinner.

CHAPTER VII.

Since Friday night, Hilliard had lived only for Sunday; his whole existence had been turned to Sunday, and when at last the morning dawned, his greatest fear was that he might not live until dinner-time.

On reaching Carol's side, he was both awkward and incoherent; and he failed to derive encouragement from the realization which gradually stole over him, that the Durants had asked a number of other guests to dinner. Armstrong was waiting patiently in the aisle, and keeping closer to Carol than Hilliard liked, and there was also a bright-faced boy of nineteen or twenty who had promptly attached himself to Angela—his name was Waring, and he was the grandson of the patriarchal clergyman, with the head of Moses and the spirit of youth, who presently came down to join the little group, and complete it. So that altogether there were nine people who finally sat down to table; and Hilliard's dream of quiet progress and harbored conversation was shattered in a twinkling.

It was all very homelike, and all very friendly, but to Hilliard, sitting there between Carol and her mother, the occasion was peculiarly acute. He had long since discarded any residue of his active fears; he was confident in his disguise to the point of recklessness, for he had covered the windings of the trail by an infinite variety of methods; and yet without having any tangible facts to grasp, he was subtly warned to remain on sentry duty over his poise.

He was gratified that the conversation, after one natural enough eddy, was whirled away from the vicissitudes of Dicky Morgan, for he had talked his fill on that particular subject. For a time, he amused himself by watching Angela and Waring playing their world-old game across the table; after that, he paid a little polite attention to Mrs. Durant, and to the clergyman; and then snatching an opportunity unlooked for, he gave his kindest smile to Carol, and for an instant took the monopoly from Armstrong. And he had hardly looked down once into her October-brown eyes before the mystery of his restlessness was as clear as crystal, and Hilliard was thoroughly dumfounded, and confused

It had come upon him, a quarter of an hour ago, as they exchanged their first superficial sentences, that he was lonelier than he had ever imagined, but he hadn't realized, until this immediate contingency, that this sensation had carried over until now. He was prevented, by the very limits of the project which had brought him here, from releasing any of his sincere thoughts; he hadn't comprehended, until he had learned the truth just now by actual experience, that loneliness is nothing but an aggravated state of self-repression. Never in all his life, not even when he had lain for months in hospital in France, had he been as lonely as today, and at this moment, when he was surrounded by people he knew intimately, and when he was enjoined from sharing in their community of mind.

Carol, looking up at him with what wasn't exactly a smile, but was at least a cousin to it—that well remembered flash of sympathetic interest—Carol spoke to him under cover of the general conversation.

"A penny for your thoughts!" she proffered.

"They aren't worth it," said Hilliard. "I was thinking about myself." He continued to regard her steadily, and he was alarmed to discover that he was losing one of the abilities which had made him so sure of himself. He continued to hold that she had treated him shabbily, mercilessly; but notwithstanding that, as he gazed at her, and perceived the sweet naturalness which was developing out of last week's shock, he was secretly perturbed. In spite of himself, he began to see, as though by camera obscura, dim visions of the past; he was righteously annoyed that they should rise to torment him, and still the visions came.

"But after all that you've been through," she said, "I should think your thoughts about yourself would be extremely interesting!"

"I'm afraid they're rather gloomy, Miss Durant, whenever they touch on what I've been through. And when anything like this gathering here today builds up a comparison. . . . I'm sorry, but I can't always master it."

"You mean the difference between a family over here and a family over there?"

"Exactly," he said. "Down to the last detail—what we eat, and where we live, and what we talk about, and what we think about—everything."

"I've thought of that, too," she said soberly. "But I'll have to confess that it wasn't until you came—it wasn't until after that first night at Angela's—that the great difference came home to me. It's made me feel that it's almost wrong—almost unendurable—that we should be so warm and comfortable, and well fed, when over on the continent . . . well, I wonder whether we won't have to pay for this some time?"

It was at this juncture that Mrs. Durant rose, and Hilliard, with keen foresight, cannily guided Carol after her mother into the living room made for a familiar piece of furniture and preempted it; it could seat two people, and no more—there was not the slightest use in Armstrong's loitering disconsolately in the neighborhood of it had a maximum capacity of two. Furthermore, it was removed by several feet from the nearest listening post.

He was so close to her that their sleeves touched; he looked into the beautiful eyes which were so clear, so unsuspecting; and his will swayed perilously. Had he prepared so long and savagely for his requital, only to lose his impetus at almost the first glance of those brown eyes? He reflected that there was nothing to prevent him from being a good salesman, and from renewing his predilection for Carol at the same time. The idea of courting her again, in his false character, was highly dramatic. . . .

"I know you won't misunderstand me," he said, his heart shaking, "and I hope that you won't consider it as too presumptuous—but—the other day you spoke of Dicky Morgan as a very dear friend of yours. Miss Durant, I want to do everything in the world I can for you, and he was my dear friend as well as yours. I'm not disloyal to him, or to you, or to myself—but I should like more than I can ever tell you to feel that I had done my utmost to take his place. No one can do that literally—I am not so vain—but I feel, and I have felt from the time we met each other, Dicky would have wanted us to be friends."

He Was So Close to Her That Their Sleeves Touched.

"That's—that's wonderfully thoughtful of you," said Carol softly. "And . . . and I think he would have wanted that . . . if he'd known. . . ." Her eyes were suspiciously dim and Hilliard's loneliness dissolved into a great spasm of longing which held him and shook him and left him weak with impotence.

"Then I'll stay in Syracuse," he said abruptly. "Provided—provided you won't be offended if I do have to want to know you for yourself—just a little selfishly. I'm afraid that isn't very clear—it's difficult to separate it—but you see—"

"Don't try to explain," she said, subdued. "I know how hard all this must be for you—and I think perhaps you need my friendship as much as I need yours."

Before he could reply, there was a flutter of indescribable gracefulness before them. Angela was courtesying in mock obeisance to the floor. Behind her, Waring was watching her possessively.

"If your majesties will wake up half a second," she said, "everybody's going to walk up around the Sedgwick farm tract to get some fresh air. Coming?"

As they stood together, drenched with regret for the confidences that might forever remain unsaid, a maid appeared in the doorway.

"Please, ma'am," she said breathlessly, "it's the Western Union—for Mr. Hilliard."

"Right in my study," called the doctor, hurrying. "Just across the hall. There you are!" and ushered him into the sanctum and considerately closed the door.

Despite the urgent summons which the average person feels under such circumstances Hilliard was astonishingly tardy in sitting down to the receiver. For one thing he was still vibrating from his recent stress of passion; for another he knew pretty certainly what the message was going to be, and for a third, he was somewhat emotionally under the spell of the doctor's room. Hilliard had spent a hundred hours in it—pleasant hours, so that involuntarily yielding to its kindly atmosphere, and all that the atmosphere implied, he took time to survey all four walls before he took up the receiver. And after he had listened to the telegram, and ordered a copy mailed to him in care of Mr. Cullen, he took time to survey those walls again, more closely; and this was partly for their intrinsic significance, and partly because his feelings were so fresh and tender that he dreaded to return at once to the gathering which, as a whole, couldn't be expected to defer to them. His eyes fell upon the doctor's desk, wandered and suddenly focussed hard and piercingly. He went over to the desk and slowly put out his hand and lifted up a small photograph in a metal frame.

"Well, I'll be darned!" said Hilliard, just above a whisper. The turning of the doorknob roused him; he wheeled with the photograph still in his hand.

"Hello!" said Doctor Durant, cheerfully. "Get your message all right? What's that you've found? Oh, yes—Dick's picture."

Hilliard swallowed hard, and found that his voice was queerly out of control.

"It's—it's the same one—"

"Yes—it's the same as the one you brought back. I've had it there ever since he gave it to me."

He took it gently from Hilliard's hand; replaced it on the desk. "How that boy would have made good if he

dertone. "Well—they're waiting for us."

Hilliard, following him outside, encountered the two Cullens in the hall, and at sight of his florid host, he collected his wits, and resumed his part in the play.

"Oh!" he said. "I—I—that was from one—that was a telegram from the manager of the syndicate, Mr. Cullen; he said it's decided not to try to resyndicate any stock, but to hold it ourselves for the long pull—everything's put off for three or four weeks anyway. I'm having a copy mailed to the house—there's some news in it I thought you might like to see."

"Good! That leaves you free, doesn't it? You'll stay on with us then? Don't say no. I insist on it!"

He Had Been Observed.

"No, I couldn't do that! It's awful kind of you, but—"

"You talk to him, Angela!" laughed Mr. Cullen. "You make him stay. You've got more influence over him than I have, anyhow. And don't you dare to let him get away without a promise—understand?" He passed on, and left them together.

"You walk along with me, sir!" said Angela, imperially. "And you'd better behave yourself—I'm fierce!"

At the same moment that he looked yearningly toward Carol, who up ahead by the doorway was already captive to the wily Armstrong, young Rufus Waring was glaring belligerently toward Hilliard.

The masquerader smiled in defeat, then smiled with sudden realization of the woman-child clinging to him. He squeezed her arm out of sheer affection.

"Your gallant cavalier'll cover me with horrid welts and bruises for this!" he said warningly. "Don't make him jealous, now!" They were now bringing up the rear of the procession in the hallway.

"I'll make 'em well again," said Angela. "I am a good nurse, aren't I?"

He was convulsed by her air of conquest.

"By the old-fashioned method?" He could hardly believe that this was the girl he had taught to climb trees, and make slingshots.

"I'll—" She stopped and blushed. The others were all on the steps; these two were in the dusky vestibule. Waring was fretting impatiently outside.

"Would you?" asked Hilliard. He intended only to tease her; but all at once her head came up, and he could see that her eyes were big and soft and frightened. She was hardly seventeen, and to Hilliard she had never ceased to be the child of two years ago. He bent and kissed her; her lips were trembling, expressive.

"Now we've got to hurry," he said. "Come, dear!"

It was the tone he would naturally use to a child, but he had an uneasy feeling that he had used it to a woman. Children's lips aren't expressive.

And he had another intuition—still more upsetting to him—which was that he had been observed. For on the threshold of the outer door Carol and Armstrong and Rufus Waring, as though turned back to inquire into the cause of Hilliard's and Angela's delay, were standing. . . .

He could not tell, of course, whether they had actually seen him. It was possible that in the dusk of the hallway he had escaped; certainly there was nothing in the manner of any one of the three, when Hilliard joined them, to convince him one way or the other. But he knew that he was in a critical situation; he knew that to any reasonable person who had seen him at that spontaneous little outburst of sentiment, his motives wouldn't appear to be very opaque.

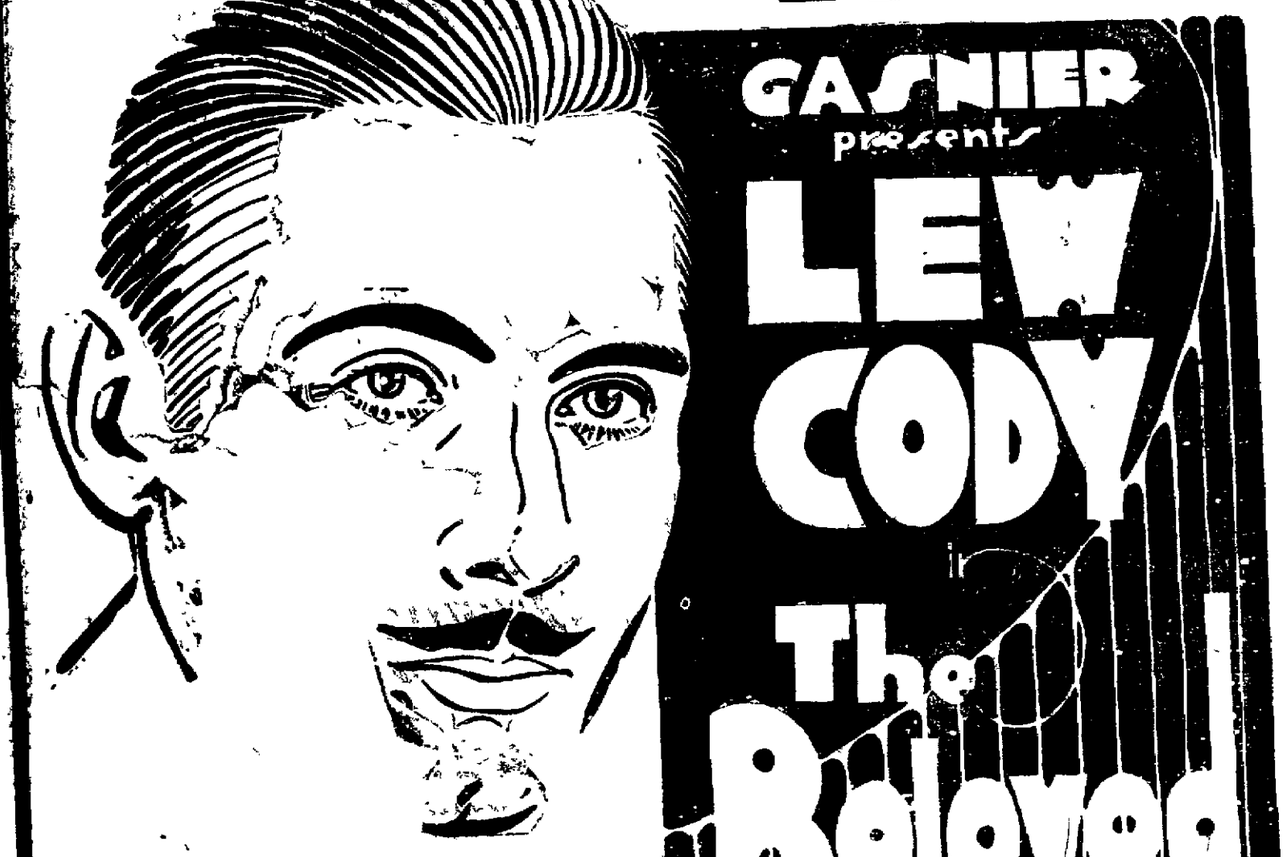

No, the manner of those three who had stood on the threshold was astonishingly casual. Perhaps too casual. . . . Hilliard frowned, and tried to glimpse their various expressions. Ah! Waring, striding stiffly ahead, had thunderclouds on his forehead, and as for Carol . . .

She turned to speak to Armstrong, and Hilliard knew.

For the remainder of the first stage of that walk, he spoke not a word to Angela, who trudged along by his side with God knows what tumults in her bosom. He thought not of Angela, nor concerned himself with the storm he had stirred within her. He was absorbed solely with the puzzle which lay before him, which was to detach Carol as soon as possible, and to explain himself. Otherwise, his reputation was ashes even now.

And, to his unbounded joy, the opportunity came soon—at the end of the road, where the party halted for a moment, to take a referendum as to the route. Armstrong strayed a yard or two too far, and on the instant Hilliard was at Carol's elbow. She said nothing, nor did he; but when the march was resumed, he was beside her—and beating his brains for an introductory remark. He had to convince her he had been trifling with neither herself nor Angela, and he walked a good furlong before he could devise so much as an opening sentence. At length he cleared his throat.

"I've just decided," he said, "that I'm growing old."

"Yes?" She was immeasurably sweet and distant, and Hilliard's courage faltered.

"I have indeed. I've made a most touching discovery. . . . Do I look grandfatherly, Miss Durant?"

"No; I'd hardly say that."

He made a gesture of gratitude. "You've earned my permanent thanks. But I am growing old. How do I know? Didn't you ever read Leigh Hunt?"

"Just a little." There was a trace of warmth creeping into her voice. Hilliard held his breath:

Say I'm weary, say I'm sad;
Say that health and wealth have missed me,
Say I'm growing old, but add—
Angela kissed me!

He had spoken the lines magnificently, with the precise humor and pathos which go to make them immortal. "I'm glad she fits into the meter," he said thoughtfully, "because I can understand just how Leigh Hunt felt about Jennie."

"And—how do you think that was?"

"Very sensitive," said Hilliard, "and perhaps a little repressed and—decrepit." He smiled reminiscently. "I suppose there are very few things in life that make a man feel more mindful of his own crudity and general worthlessness than to have a child's spontaneous affection." It was the testing venture. She looked at him sidewise.

"More than if—if it weren't a child?"

"I think so." His tone was faultless. "A woman can make a man feel like Romeo, but it takes a very young girl to make him feel like Launcelot—at my age."

"She is adorable, isn't she?" His heart jumped at her cordial acceptance of his statement. "Only—she's seventeen, Mr. Hilliard."

"I know," he said gravely. "And that's why I'm so conscious of my own senility. Because all that beautiful innocence and ignorance is doomed, Miss Durant—who knows that I'm not the very last person to see it? Today, I'm only a much older man, some one she likes; tomorrow, I may be a man without the 'only,' and the more she liked me, the less she'd show it. But there's been mighty little of that sort of thing for me in the last few years from anybody, and I do appreciate it, and I'm not ashamed of it, either."

"No," she said, "you couldn't be. You're too human." She smiled at him, and he was transported at the proof of her sympathy. "If I were in your place, I'd want to feel the same way about it."

He thanked her in his heart. He had saved both Angela and himself, and held his pristine advantage.

But there was no disputing the fact that he had made an active enemy of Waring, and an alert rival out of Armstrong. He smiled grimly as he looked at the man ahead.

"Mr. Armstrong seems to be very nervous," he said. "Not that I can blame him for wanting to be in my place. On the contrary, I'm sorry for him."

"That shows a very good disposition," she said demurely.

"Perhaps it does, and perhaps it doesn't. I believe every man owes it to himself to get what he wants. If he does, he's a success; if he doesn't—it's his own fault."

As he said this, they came abreast of the others, and Armstrong, who had heard the final sentence, whirled toward Hilliard.

"Regardless of methods?" he demanded.

"Why—to some extent," laughed Hilliard. "Why not?"

Armstrong delayed so that the two men were a few paces behind the rest of the group. "Is that your regular creed, Mr. Hilliard?"

"My creed isn't composed of words, Mr. Armstrong, but of actions."

They had spoken so quietly that no one perceiving them would have remotely suspected that a challenge had been offered and accepted.

"Actions do speak louder, of course."

"Mine," said Hilliard, "will give you no offense. But—I generally get what I want."

"So do I. Shall we shake hands on it?" Armstrong was very affable, but tremendously in earnest.

"With pleasure. I can count on your generosity, I see."

"And I on your courtesy."

"Thank you." He went complacently forward, but inwardly he was steeped in perturbation. The man was so deadly sure of himself. Could it be that he was tacitly engaged to Carol in spite of what Angela had surmised or so nearly on the road to an understanding with her that Hilliard was only making a fool of himself?

Armstrong laughed gently. It was like a dagger thrust in Hilliard's heart.

IF SKIN BREAKS OUT AND ITCHES APPLY SULPHUR

Just the moment you apply Mentho-Sulphur to an itching, burning or broken out skin, the itching stops and healing begins, says a noted skin specialist. This sulphur preparation, made into a pleasant cold cream, gives such a quick relief, even to fiery eczema, that nothing has ever been found to take its place.

Because of its germ destroying prperties, it quickly subdues the itching, cools the irritation and heals the eczema right up, leaving a clear, smooth skin in place of ugly eruptions, rash, pimples or roughness.

You do not have to wait for improvement. It quickly shows. You can get a little jar of Mentho-Sulphur at any drug store.

TO AVOID GRIPPE AND INFLUENZA

What To Do To Protect Yourself

Keep out of crowds.

Avoid people who have colds.

Don't get excited when you do catch cold. Neglected colds run into pneumonia. Take care of them.

Eat and drink moderately.

Maintain the atmosphere in living rooms, fresh, clean and cool.

Keep the mouth and throat clean by maintaining as nearly as possible a healthy condition of the mucous membranes.

Many doctors will tell you that for years they have prescribed and used for this purpose a gargle of warm MU-COL solution each night and morning.

This solution is easily and quickly made, economical, too. Simply go to your druggist and say, "I want a package of MU-COL." Dissolve half a teaspoonful in a teacupful of warm water. It is then ready to use.

For 20 years MU-COL was advertised exclusively to physicians. Today any druggist can supply you.

Mrs. J. M. McCannof, of Patton, spent yesterday shopping in town.

TRUE LOVE NEVER DID RUN SMOOTH BUT THIS IS AWFUL

This recurrent influenza epidemic may not be as severe or far-reaching in its devastating effects as that terrible disease which swept the country in the fall and winter of 1918, but it has already served to cause a great deal of sickness, worry and other inconveniences in this section.

Thus far it has leveled doctors, lawyers, preachers and even undertakers. Not content with invading these higher paid professions it has even so far forgot the proprieties as to tackle members of the poorly-remunerated teaching profession.

The latest circumstance we have in mind comes from the Third Ward of Clearfield. One of the popular Third Ward teachers quitely arranged to enter into the blissful state of matrimony and had yesterday set for the happy day and date. The groom, who resides in Tyrone, arrived in town according to schedule and was very much worried to find his bride-to-be down with the flu.

The happy couple had arranged to leave on the 1:15 train yesterday, but the bride's illness made the schedule look bad. The young lady was game, however, and told the expectant husband to get the license and the preacher and she believed she would be equal to the situation.

The young man hustled over to the Recorder's office hot-foot and Deputy George W. Gulich soon provided the required legal permit for the wedding. That was the easiest part of the performance. Being a stranger in town, the prospective groom enlisted the aid of Mr. Gulich for the securing of a minister to perform the ceremony. One preacher was called on the phone but he had fallen on the ice and was unable to get out of his house. A second was communicated with and on account of his wife being down with the flu he was unable to officiate. A third and a fourth could not be reached on the phone.

By now train time was fast approaching and the expectant couple began to get anxious. When informed that no preacher was available Mr. Gulich was requested to secure the services of a Justice of the Peace, and again the quest was taken up. 'Squire Bain's office was called and it was learned that the long 'Squire was out of town. 'Squire Chorpenning was then apprised of the situation and when he heard the bride-to-be was down with the flu he, being somewhat under the weather himself, refused to take a chance and by that time the 1:15 train was passing the curve at the brewery en route to Tyrone and the wedding cavalcade hadn't even begun to start.

Joy was far removed about this time and the poor unfortunate couple were beginning to believe the whole world was conspiring against them. But there is a silver lining to all clouds and a friend, after finally locating a minister willing to brave the jinx conditions and the flu, finally secured one and arrangements were completed.

The bride improved immediately, and was smiles once more and the wedding journey—tho delayed a few hours—was undertaken last evening with all cares left behind.

LONDON WOMEN ARE KEEPING JOBS THEY HELD DURING WAR

LONDON.—Women took the helm in wartime and they have no intention of giving it up. It is now quite a common sight in London streets to see Daphne at the wheel of the automobile while Adonis leans back in the purple plush.

One may see women in evening dress driving themselves through the streets of London en route for the ball or the theatre, and the little car, pretty enough for Cinderella at a pantomime, zig-zags daintily in and out of the heavy traffic like a venturesome kitten in a den of lions.

Wanted It Understood.

In the bygone days when street car fares were 5 cents for grownups and 3 cents for children under 12, two small boys of 12 and 7 mounted the platform. The younger boy had been promised the 2 cents change from the dime they had for carfare. He handed the coin to the conductor, who did not immediately turn over the pennies. The anxious child then remarked politely but forcefully "I'm worth only 3 cents."—Chicago Tribune

ASK DAMAGES FOR DEATH OF COALPORT LAD ON RAILROAD

Suit was entered in the Clearfield County Courts yesterday by Attorneys Charles J. Margiotti, of Punxsutawney, and John C. Arnold of Clearfield on behalf of Ferdinando and Gemma Pisaneschi, of Coalport, and against Walker D. Hines, director general of railroads, and the Pennsylvania [illegible] it is sought to recover [illegible] damages for the death [illegible] of a Pennsylvania [illegible] Pisaneschi the [illegible] years, son of the defendants.

The statement recites that on July 9, 1919, a Pennsylvania freight [illegible] to block the grade crossing at Pine street, in the borough of Coalport, and that even though the cars were blocking the crossing making it impossible for pedestrians or vehicles to cross no trainman or watchman was placed on guard there to warn travelers. That during this time the little Pisaneschi boy came along and attempted to cross under the train. When between the rails the train started suddenly and the child was caught and dragged a distance of some 62 feet. Persons who witnessed the accident signalled the trainmen and attempted to acquaint them with the situation, but the statement continues "such signals were carelessly and negligently received" but no attention paid to them and before the child, who was yet alive, could be removed from the track the train started to back and several cars ran over the lad crushing his life out.

The case will be placed upon the trial list for May court.

LAST HOME GAME OF BASKET BALL TOMORROW NITE

The last home game on the League schedule will be played on the High school floor Friday evening when Punxsutawney brings their basketball team here to compete with the C. H. S. five. Punxsutawney held first place in the League until last week when DuBois assumed the lead, due to Punxy's losing to New Bethlehem. With such a fine record in their favor, Punxsputawney hopes to repeat, on our floor, the success of the game played on their floor, which was greatly in their favor.

However, Clearfield has improved a great deal since that game and with any kind of reasonable circumstances hopes to give Punxsy their second defeat. Practice work the past week has been very encouraging and Coach Heisey promises a bang-up game for Friday.

If you want to see the snappiest game of the season just come around tomorrow evening—it's going to be a hummer.

MEAT CAUSE OF KIDNEY TROUBLE

Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers—Meat forms uric acid.

If [illegible] must have your meat every day, [illegible] flush your kidneys with [illegible] occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irirtated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.
